We're gonna be lynched by a bunch of animal activists.

That was just one of the worries we had finishing up InQuest #1 back in April of 1995. But we got it out the door—the "vampire squeezing a dead bird" cover and 80 pages of magazine. Who would've thought we'd still be going strong three years later? (All right, it's three years give or take a month, for you math-inclined wonders out there.)

As with many things in life, it seems like just yesterday we were scribbling down notes for a "Killer Deck" column and vowing to produce graphics a little better than a well-fed gerbil squatting on typing paper. At the same time, it seems like forever since we sat up that last night before film on InQuest #1 went to press, desperately designing pages and praying our bleary eyes were seeing the word Magic, and not "midgets," over and over again.

To give you an idea of how time has passed, when InQuest was a mere babe Magic's Fallen Empires was ruling the scene, news on Ice Age hadn't quite reached us and you couldn't sell your grandma for even a whiff of where new cards could be found. (Maybe you can't now either, but at least you can walk into a store and pick some up.) The collectible card game boom was revving up, but only games like Star Trek: The Next Generation, Illuminati and Spellfire were available—no Middle-earth, no Legend of the Five Rings, no BattleTech.

What did InQuest look like back then? Yikes! We had enough white space to blind Superman. We were crude—sometimes we threw things together to see what worked—but our philosophy was the same back then as it is today: entertain and educate.

Some mainstays were around then, though. This editor's letter page existed. And back then, we didn't always know what to say either. Our letters pages, "InQuisition," existed, but Rick Swan wasn't writing it, and our Magic question-and-answer column, "Stumpers," was a small sidebar thrown in at the end.

"IQ News" was a staple, with interesting news stories about some kind of new Star Wars collectible card game and how Magic's Fourth Edition was going to clean up the pesky rules questions.

Amazingly enough, "Swan Song" ended the issue. Other than price and players guides, that was it. Everything else you see has evolved over time.

What's my point, assuming I had one to start with? In three years, we've come a long way, made a lot of improvements and delivered (we hope) a magazine that's fun, informative, hard-hitting at times and always a bit goofy. We'll continue along that track for the next three years.

Just think about it. Three years from now is 2001. We'll be in the next century. InQuest will be clocking in at issue #72, there'll surely be another unexpected trend in gaming to excite us all... and the animal activists still won't have found us.

InQuisition

WE'RE THREE-YEAR-OLDS!

I don't mean I'm a three-year-old—I can shuffle my own cards. But InQuest and "InQuisition"—which has been part of the mag since issue #1—are three years old this month. In that time, these pages have seen more than 400 letters discussing dozens of topics crucial to the continued existence of the free world. Stuff like…how to tell boys and girls apart (InQuest #16), the first recorded use of the word "assnut" (#22), cat genitals (#26), games which 'create a vacuum by action of the lips and tongue' (#32), and, of course, rolling dice with your ass (#35). With that kinda coverage, you definitely won't want to miss the next three years.

And what's wrong with many people enjoying* Magic*? You don't personally have to play against everyone who owns a deck. If you want an exclusive hobby, may I suggest buttweasel tossing?

MAGIC BITES

I think Magic really bites now. I remember when I first started playing and enjoyed it. That was when there wasn't all this new ability stuff. I understand WotC has to make new stuff for the cards, but it's gotten ridiculous. I haven't bought a pack of Tempest yet in protest of Shadow and Buyback. Since I haven't bought a pack, my decks get overrun against all this new junk. So many people play Magic now it makes me sick. I liked the game much more when it was a controlled game.

Nick Mezmar
Cyberspace

New abilities keep the game fresh, Nick.

INQUEST BITES

Every now and then I'll pick up an InQuest to see if there's anything interesting. Every time, I walk away feeling ripped-off. It seems that you aim your magazine toward 14-17 year olds. If someone writes a letter that criticizes you, you pass it off with some smart-ass comment. Your coverage of the gaming market is pretty narrow (80% of it is about Wizards of the Coast).

I understand Magic is the most popular game out there, but dedicating so much of your magazine to it is really boring to other gamers. To make matters worse, you waste space by giving tours of InQuest and the WotC offices. It's not all bad, but the bad unfortunately does outweigh the good.

Darryl Anderson
Prince George, BC, Canada

Well, Darryl, WotC is 80 percent of the game market. That's why their products get lots of ink. Still,* InQuest gives substantial coverage to non-WotC games like Decipher's Star Wars and White Wolf's World of Darkness titles. Heck, we even try to plug Wingnut's Battle Cattle *every chance we get. As for the non-technical stuff, maybe you'll enjoy it more when you turn 14.

PAUL BROWN BITES?

In response to Paul Brown's "Kitty Letter" in issue #34's "InQuisition," I'd like to say, "Bite me!" If you don't like their sense of humor, that's your problem; don't blame it on them. I love to read InQuest and it doesn't appeal to me because it "appeals to the funny bones of high-school dropouts." I'm not a high-school dropout.

of Precedence Publishing and believes InQuest emphasizes juvenile humor at the expense of honest reporting.

It is extremely ignorant of Mr. Brown to call people "high school dropouts" just because we have a sense of humor. Well, Mr. President, I have a few things to tell you. I graduated high school with a 3.87 grade average; my college board exam was the fifth highest among my class. I passed the advanced college placement test in Spanish and English. I wrote my class poem and was a founding member of the school's English and computer clubs. At university level, I was president of the Natural Sciences Student Association, member of the student council and graduated Cum Laude with an Associates Degree in science. Currently, I'm the secretary for the Student Nursing Association. So if you think you can write to InQuest and call us all high-school dropouts, I have a word for you... Q'apla!

Wanda-Ivelisse Gonzalez
Moca, Puerto Rico

I, too, had an average in high school and received a diploma upon graduating. Also, they awarded me a certificate in Driver's Education.

What on earth is Paul Brown babbling about? Paul has missed the point, as executive types in their suits and corner offices often do. InQuest is hip because they don't appear to be reaching for the flavor of the week, or following the predictions of "game industry decision makers." In a word, they're independent.

As for bathroom level jokes? Please. That only shows the level of humor Paul is sensitive to. Sure, the words "crap," "ass" and "buttweasel" are there. But that's because IQ works with language young people might use. I've seen more inside-jokes, puns and irony than you can shake a back-issue at in each month's copy.

I haven't seen anything but honest appraisals of each game that comes out, and the coverage has only increased since issue #29. I pity the IQ staff who have to learn at least three games a week to stay on top of the industry and maintain an opinion worth reading. Thanks, guys. You're far from high-school dropouts. You appeal to my funny bone, and I got a 1270 on my SAT! Don't ever stop the humor!

Steven John Satak
Poulsbo, Washington

Sob... choke... chortle... I couldn't have said it [whimper] better myself [blubber]...thanks, John. Now back to work, there are still 312 chapters to read in the new Moby Dick roleplaying game, then it's on to the Smurfs™ collectible dice game. The dice are made out of actual Smurf corpses (apparently they turn white when they die).

KNEE-DEEP IN EXPANSIONS

Who in their right mind can possibly keep up with all of the Magic expansions? The extreme influx of cards in the current Type II environment is enough to have Cow Nose scratching at the litterbox with catnip induced fantasies of fresh litter!

Here in Farmington, New Mexico, there is an excellent following for Magic, as well as other CCGs. However, most of us are finding the game diluted and stale. It has become a game of those who have access (either by owning the store or having hefty allowances) against those who don't. Most of us working folks who love the game simply need more time to puke up the dough for two or three boxes of cards. Three expansions a year is too much!

You're saying there's money in puke? Here kitty, kitty, kitty...

SPAWN OF COW NOSE

I have a problem here in Erie. There's a couple of cats at my house who say their names are Pig Tail and Pony Hoof and they claim to be Cow Nose's long-lost cousins. They demand a first-class flight to the InQuest office to reunite with her. Please send $200 dollars and two first-class plane tickets for them.

KITTY LETTER

AWARDED EACH MONTH TO A LETTER THAT TICKLED OUR FANCY FOR NO APPARENT REASON.

I'm a strange breed in that I'm both a gamer and religious. I thought I'd help clear up the confusion on what is and isn't evil in Magic: The Gathering

The shallow look at Magic is nothing short of moronic. "Oooh, here's the word 'demon' and here's 'fallen angel.'" Douse them in holy water before it's too late!" The words "demon" and "fallen angel" are hardly satanic. If that were true, the Bible itself would be satantic as it mentions the Devil, fallen angels and demons. What is evil is invoking and using them.

Two cards that concern Christians are Lord of the Pit and Fallen Angel. Lord of the Pit is clearly a high-ranking demon. It's blasphemous that he is more than a match for an Archangel, the highest-ranking angel. Demons, by the Christian standpoint should be weaker or equal to angels. In Magic, it's the other way around.

Another problem is the 5th Ed. flavor text on Fallen Angel. It can be interpreted as "evil is stronger than good." If evil is stronger than good, then God will lose at the battle of Armageddon. Obviously, that's blasphemy.

Erik Hatinen
Bismarck, ND

P.S. Elves, too, are technically evil. There's none mentioned in the Bible, and more importantly, some work for Santa. He's replaced Jesus as the Christmas icon and that is a huge problem to genuine Christians.

You've obviously given this a lot of thought, Erik, but people who get upset because a black card has a higher number on it than a white card are beyond reasoning with. Magic: The Gathering has nothing to do with religion, other than borrowing some of its imagery. It's a card game and reading all kinds of ominous things into it is part of the problem.

RICK SWAN SEEKS REAL ANSWERS TO STUPID QUESTIONS

TO: Army Reserves,
Des Moines, Iowa

Dear Recruiter,

I'm out of high school and need a job. I believe my favorite hobby has prepared me for the military as it involves declaring attackers and defenders, combat, stuff like that. I've commanded (Icatian) Infantry, (Soltari) Troopers and even the Kjelderan Home Guard, though not always with great success. I definitely need additional training.

Does it sound like I have a future in the armed forces? How do I join?

Thanks,

GARFIELD IS GREAT

I've been playing Magic since Fallen Empires. When I first started playing, I wasn't that amazed, but as time went on I became addicted. I've tried lots of other CCGs, but nothing is better than Magic.

You can walk into a bookstore or coffee shop or whatever place Magic players hang out and just pull up a chair and play. Richard Garfield did a good thing by making Magic. He has opened up new doors to peoples minds. Heck, in a way he has helped keep million of people off the streets and he encourages people to use their minds instead of their fists. He deserves to make all the money he can off Magic. I just wish I could meet him. He seems like he'd be a cool guy to hang out with.

Dave King
Albany, GA

I agree, Magic is a good thing and Richard Garfield's invention has benefited us all. Now that he's famous, it is tough to meet him, though. But if a guy were to get a monkey suit, and go out to his monkey ranch? Hmmm.

SPELLFIRE & MONKEYS

I have some weird Spellfire cards made by TSR. What the hell are they and are they worth anything? I haven't seen them anywhere else and was wondering if they are worth any money. One more thing, I heard Richard Garfield was selling monkeys to work on the InQuest staff—is that true?

Alan Proctor
Fort Worth, TX

Someone help Alan out: what's a Spellfire card worth? I'll run the best answer in "InQuisition." As for monkeys on the InQuest staff, I called Editor Mike Searle to ask if the rumor was true and he said he'd tell me, but first I had to give him a banana.

That's it for this birthday "InQuisition." I'm sure thousands of you will be moved to send presents. The volume of mail prevents me from sending individual notes to all who send gifts, so just pick an appropriate comment from the list below:

- "Hey! There's a gift!"
- "This is perfect for wearing around the basement."
- "Gosh. I hope this never catches fire! It is fire season though. There are lots of unexplained fires."
- "If the dog buries it, I'll be furious!"
- "I love it—but fear the jealousy it will inspire."
- "I really don't deserve this."

New Rules Manager for Magic

"Beth Moursund says one thing, D'Angelo says another, and Tom Wylie overrules both of them. You get a different answer every day."

This statement from a Pro Tour level player sums up the sad state of Magic's rules muddle. With hundreds of new cards every year and constant—often bizarre—DCI rulings and reversals, Magic is in danger of being crushed under the massive weight of its own rules.

This situation will hopefully get better with the recent naming of long-time DCI judge and InQuest "Stumpers" columnist Beth Moursund as the new Magic rules manager; she is replacing Tom Wylie in that position.

Magic's rules police have a new leader—InQuest columnist Beth Moursund.

Under the present system, even tournament judges are frustrated by the constant changes. "There's a problem with any game in which even the best players don't know the rules. In chess, for example, you never find a serious player who doesn't know how the game is played," said Matt Hyra, a Level III judge.

Dan Gray, the highest ranked judge who isn't employed by Wizards of the Coast, added, "Nonstop tinkering frustrates everyone and makes the rules extremely difficult to learn and remember."

Even locating the most current set of rules can be an arduous task. Stephen D'Angelo, WotC's official rules summary network representative, posts a rulings summary on the Internet, but reading this overwhelming 270-page compilation can leave players more confused than when they started.

After her appointment, Moursund expressed a strong commitment to addressing these problems. "My first priority is to put out the current brushfires—the problems with continuous effects, counters on Mishra's Factories, that sort of thing. Then I'll look into other areas that have been causing a lot of confusion," she said. "The rules team and I will also see if we can streamline the rules without making major changes," Moursund said. "I'll also be working with the designers of next year's sets to try to catch problems before they make it into print.

"Tom Wylie was working on a lot of different projects, so he didn't have the time to watch for developing problems and work out solutions with the Rules Group," Moursund said. "That's why they've brought me in." Moursund believes that any large-scale reworking of the rules should wait for Sixth Edition. "The current rules do need some patching here and there, maybe a bit of glue or duct tape, but the overall structure is sound," she said.

The current rules errata process has all proposed changes go through the Rules Group, which is comprised of people from Magic research and development and the Duelists' Convocation International (DCI). Agreed upon changes get reviewed, poked and prodded by WotC customer service, the net reps and top-level tournament judges. Those that survive this process are compiled and take effect on the first of each month. Changes are published on WotC's web site and highlights are featured in InQuest's "Magic Updates" column (page 21).

Now that this process has someone in charge who can devote the required time to it, Magic fans should see improvement. Unfortunately, fixing the current mess will require even more rules updates and clarifications. ■ Collin Jackson

New Developers for White Wolf's Vampire RPGs

White Wolf's Vampire RPGs are-a-changin'.

The World of Darkness is undergoing a, umm... revamping. Justin Achilli, former Vampire: the Dark Ages developer has been named developer for the top-selling Vampire: The Masquerade game.

Achilli plans to take Vampire into the modern night. "I see vampires getting more involved in modern idioms," he says. "If the Kindred are truly everywhere, their society needs to reflect it. I very much want to distinguish Vampire from the rest of the stuff that's out there... Vampire is its own unique entity: a rich, passionate horror game that doesn't get mocked on 'The Simpsons,'" he said.

Though he can't reveal many details, Achilli promises "plenty of surprises and details on as-yet unexplained lore" in the future of Vampire. His first major short-term project is Transylvania Chronicles 2: Son of the Dragon. In this chronicle, players' characters will not only witness significant events in Vampire history, but take part in them.

"The real world and the World of Darkness have changed significantly in the past six years," Achilli said. "I'll do what needs to be done to reflect that."

As Achilli steps out of his Dark Ages shoes, Richard Dansky steps in. Dansky is the former developer for Wraith: The Oblivion and is excited about his new challenge.

Dansky plans to dive head-first into the Dark Ages with Jerusalem by Night, a book covering the city's history, inhabitants and politics, and touching on the surrounding Crusader Kingdoms. He intends to continue what has gained him the respect of Wraith fans everywhere: his no-holds-barred, hands-on, personal approach to game development. Dansky has never been afraid to tackle tough subjects as was demonstrated when he published the controversial Charnel Houses of Europe: The Shoah, a book about the Holocaust, for the Wraith line.

In his new role, Dansky plans to focus on the conflicts of faith and class and on the inner workings of the vampires of the Dark Ages, rather than simply their machinations. "Death and resurrection are core themes in so much religious thought," Dansky says. "Vampirism encompasses both. I think there's a natural fit there and a lot of fertile ground to be explored." ■ Heather Grove

Xena: Collectible Princess

Xena, Warrior Princess, is preparing to flip, punch and kick her way into the hearts and wallets of collectible card game buffs everywhere.

A CCG based on her top-rated syndicated TV show is slated to be Wizards of the Coast's next big mainstream release. Using the ARC system rules which debut with the comic CCG C•23 in April (see "WotC's Next big Collectible Card Game," IQ News, InQuest #35), Xena will combine simple gameplay with a hot TV property in an attempt to attract new gamers.

Lucy Lawless plays Xena. And now you can too—well, at least in the CCG.

"Xena conventions attract 20,000 people every year, and conventioneers we demonstrated the game to loved it," said Associate Brand Manager Paul Randles. "Not only did they love it, but within 15 minutes, they were playing and, in many cases, winning."

"And if the established gamer is any kind of Xena fan, they're gonna love the images and flavor text taken directly from the scripts of the show," Randles added.

Following on Xena's heels will be the Hercules: The Legendary Journeys CCG. Like all ARC system games, these titles will share the same basic rules but each will also have something unique to its game play. Xena and Hercules should both come in 40-card starter decks, retailing for $6. Boosters will have 12 cards and cost $2.50. ■ Tom Slizewski

From Here to Alternity

Roleplaying's "space race" is heating up next month with TSR's launch of the Alternity RPG.

In a genre already crowded with games like White Wolf's new Trinity, as well as old favorites like Rifts, Traveller and Star Wars: The RPG, Alternity hopes to carve its niche by being familiar and accessible. "Alternity emphasizes an easy-to-use central game mechanic" according to Bill Slavicsek, TSR Product Group Director and Alternity co-designer. He feels this mechanic makes the game "a powerful tool for players and gamemasters who like to try new things or experiment with settings without having to learn new systems."

Alternity* hopes to win fans by being accessible and user-friendly.

Alternity's strength is its flexibility. "It isn't designed for a single setting or genre, but instead works for any sci-fi genre you can imagine," says Slavicsek. Alternity is so adaptable that TSR has even considered converting old favorites like Gamma World and Star Frontiers to the new system.

Alternity will be marketed similarly to AD&D, with hardcover core rule books, followed by campaign settings and other source materials. The first campaign universe will be *Star*Drive*, set in 2501 as humans and a variety of aliens seek to recover from a hundred-year galactic war. TSR describes it as "a gritty, industrial space opera" centered on the frontier region known as "the Verge."

TSR's financial difficulties in 1996 and 1997, and its purchase by Wizards of the Coast, delayed Alternity's planned GenCon 1997 release until Spring of '98. Last year's GenCon did see publication of 2,600 limited edition Player's Handbooks as well as the introductory mini-adventure "Cauldron Station."

The unlimited edition Player's Handbook will be available in April, with the Gamemaster Guide following in May. The *Star*Drive* campaign setting is scheduled for a July release. All three will be priced at $30. TSR has a total of 10 Alternity game products and two novels planned for '98.

OverPower Finds a Home

Spider-Man and his costumed collectible card game cohorts are orphans no longer. Fleer/SkyBox is transferring custody of the comic-book-based OverPower CCG to another branch of Marvel Entertainment Group: Marvel Interactive (MI).

"Most of our activity online has been about creating new brands of entertainment and building community," said Marvel Interactive Senior Vice President Paul Kallis. "OverPower is an established brand [and] moving into other media with existing brands is a lot easier."

MI is trying to finalize plans for a June or July release of the game's next expansion, Image OverPower, and intends to revitalize the OverPower Legion fan club, web site (www.overpower.com) and help line (800-OP-RULES). Weekly America Online OverPower chats resumed in February. MI also intends to create OverPower online and computer games.

"Outta my way Fleer/SkyBox, OverPower's got a new owner."

Fleer/SkyBox Entertainment Director Steve Charendoff said that MI "wanted it the most and... made an offer that made the most sense." He noted that "a handful" of companies had shown interest in the game and that MI's corporate ties were not a compelling factor in the decision. The exact terms of the deal were not disclosed, but Fleer/SkyBox will retain an ongoing interest in the game without overseeing or monitoring it. ■ Matthew E. Milliken

BLAST FROM THE PAST

A LOOK AT INQUEST'S FAVORITE CLASSIC GAMES

NAME: GAMMA WORLD
ORIGIN: TSR, 1978
TYPE: Science-Fantasy RPG
CONCEPT: Player characters—as humans, mutants or mutated animals/plants—explore a postapocalyptic Earth while wielding futuristic weapons and mutant powers.
LEGACY: Continuing the evolution begun in 1976's Metamorphosis: Alpha RPG, Gamma World plays very much like Advanced Dungeons & Dragons, making it a pioneer of sorts as a "shared system" game. But Gamma World's major legacy is goofiness. GW is made for those who like their roleplaying on the absurd side: Player characters could be mutant emu, penguin hybrids and, yes, even walking/talking cacti. And items such as toasters were considered valuable finds. Characters like "Arley Avidson" and "Sears" with his rifle "Roebuck" inevitably populated the absurd realms of Gamma World.
AVAILABILITY: Gamma World went through three editions and had nine scenario/supplement packs released for it. The last edition was printed in 1986 and the game is now out of print; however, it's still readily available at cons and used-game stores.

Success in the Shadows

Remember Towers in Time? Or Netrunner, the light-selling, critically acclaimed collectible card game from Wizards of the Coast? Or the dozens of other CCGs that quickly passed into cardboard oblivion? Probably not.

Few CCGs have been able to find a following in the highly competitive game arena. Of the 63 CCGs detailed in last year's "Full Deck" feature (InQuest #25), only 10 are still being supported.

And though the survival rate for new CCGs is dismal, a few manage to beat the odds. One such is FASA's Shadowrun: The Trading Card Game. Released last August, this game will soon enjoy its second printing and first expansion—Underworld.

According to FASA, 60 percent of the first printing sold within a month and most of the rest after four months. "We were confident that the property was strong enough to make a good profit, be a strong game and potentially be an added game line," said FASA President Jill Lucas. "We're very happy with it."

FASA's Shadowrun CCG, based on their popular RPG, is blowing fans away.

Shadowrun: TCG is based on FASA's 8-year-old RPG of the same name and blends fantasy and cyberpunk elements; its success is likely due to loyal Shadowrun players and FASA's track record of quality products, which encouraged favorable handling from distributors and retailers.

"I am the happiest guy on the planet because I think we succeeded [in creating] an interesting, fun card game that will make a person who plays it become interested in the rest of the roleplaying game," said Mike Mulvihill, who manages the Shadowrun line and helped design the CCG.

The Underworld expansion due out in March will add 141 cards and be sold in 15-card booster packs. "There's an obvious theme of the underworld syndicates—mafia, yakuza—in addition to Lone Star and gangs," said S:TCG lead designer Mike Nielsen. Players can also expect to find deadly biological virus tokens, shamans and help for elves battling strong opponents like Lord Torgo.

The revised core set is due in April and will be called Second Run. It's scheduled to have 350 cards, a handful of new illustrations and 25 to 50 new cards. ■ Matthew E. Milliken

Places to Play Magic

Wizards Of The Coast wants to see you in the zone—the Magic Zone. Magic Zones are WotC's latest effort to broaden the appeal of their Magic: The Gathering collectible card game. The "Zones" will offer younger players (ages eight to 15) a place to gather and play their favorite game with adult supervision. Magic Zones will be located in libraries, community centers and schools, but not in retail stores. Volunteers from retail stores will, however, teach Magic and run non-competitive tournaments.

According to Patricia Krause, clubs coordinator for junior programs at WotC, the intent behind the Magic Zones is to provide a safe place for social play. Players will be able to meet other players, learn about the game and its rules, and compete against each other at a casual level, well below that of DCI or the Pro Tour. Magic Zones will also provide a way for parents who are curious about Magic to learn about the game that's sucked up all of their kid's free time.

The first Magic Zones should be in place in March, with Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Texas and Washington likely to have the first sites. Anyone interested in establishing a "Zone" or learning more about the program should contact Krause at WotC's website (www.wizards.com) for more information. ■ Steve Long

MAGIC UPDATES

GENERAL RULINGS

• Abilities that enable you to play a spell or ability without paying its casting cost or activation cost do not eliminate additional cost; those must still be played. For example, playing a White Knight with both Aluren and Gloom in play costs three generic mana.

• There is no longer a "between turns" step. [Thus the ridiculously stupid Wall of Roots/Stasis/Magma Mine combo is officially illegal. –ed.]

ERRATA

• The word "base" should appear before power and toughness on all spells and abilities that can turn a permanent into a creature. This means that counters affect the creature and that reactivating the ability doesn't reset its power and toughness.

• Interdict's second sentence should read: "Activated abilities of that permanent cannot be played again this turn." Note that "activated ability" means "ability with an activation cost."

• On all cards that have one of your opponents make a choice, "target opponent" should read "an opponent."

• Time Vault's first activated ability should read: "Skip your next turn: Untap Time Vault and put a time counter on it. Play this ability only if Time Vault is tapped and only once each turn."

SPECIFIC CARD RULINGS

• When Minion of the Wastes is about to come into play by any means other than being cast, you must choose an amount of life and pay it right before the Minion comes into play.

• REVERSAL: Global effects that change one land type to another overwrite all of a card's current land types. For example, Conversion turns Badlands into a Plains, not a Badlands that counts as both a Swamp and a Plains.

"InQuest, read the InQuest, it's a modern stone age magaziiine. From the, town of Congers, it's a page right out of historeee." And history is what we're documenting here every month in "IQ Confidential." Sure, it's news now, but a few years from now it won't just be old news, it'll be history:

• Wizards of the Coast is working on a parody Magic expansion (working title: Magic:TG—Unglued.) featuring several dozen ultra-powerful "fun" cards. These cards should look like standard Magic cards but won't be tournament legal and will have wild and wacky powers. Hmmm... Isn't there a magazine that's been doing this kinda thing for years?

• There may be a GenCon boycott in the works. The steep price increases for exhibitors reported in last month's column have caused some smaller companies to "just say no" to the biggest hobby gaming con in the world. Leading the naysayers is Steve Jackson Games (GURPS, In Nomine). Jackson has announced that his company won't be there. Palladium Books (Rifts, Nightbane) and R. Talsorian (Cyberpunk) also announced they are opting out.

• West End is reportedly one of five companies looking to acquire licenses from Central Park Media to produce games based on hot anime properties like "Dominion." Central Park was very happy with the work R. Talsorian did on Armored Trooper VOTOMS and apparently others believe there's unmet demand in the anime game market.

• A TSR staffer was kind enough to clarify the company's non-competition policy mentioned in InQuest 34:

"The creative staff is not allowed to write games for TSR competitors. On the other hand, if a TSR staffer writes a non-campaign setting-specific book, all TSR asks is right of first refusal. (And the staff is always free to write non-competitive works, as long as such projects don't interfere with normal work.) The six-month moratorium is a remnant of the past ownership/administration and no longer will be enforced—that's why the prodigal artists haven't been asked to sign such an agreement."

• This summer look for a parody of the Settlers of Catan game. With the working title, Settlers of Kentucky, this Ken Whitman design will have players managing resources like hound dogs, tobacca and junk cars in an attempt to be the first to build shacks and raise stills. Packaging is reportedly going to be a plain brown paper bag.

• Rumor has it that new Feng Shui supplements are in the works. Feng Shui's publisher, Daedalus Games, has been mired in bankruptcy court and can't produce new material for this well-received roleplaying game of kung fu action movies. An unnamed company has allegedly been given the OK to produce Feng Shui supplements. The first of these is supposed to be out by late Spring '98.

• "IQ Confidential" stated in issue #34 that Mr. Tapio committed a crime by producing a magazine and supplements for Avalon-Hill's *Advanced Squad Leader game. Since the court ruled in his favor, technically, no crime was committed.

Remember, you saw it here first. Why you'd wanna remember that, we don't know, but they say that a lot on TV, and since we've all watched too much TV, we're saying it too. If you get hit up by a panhandler who used to be a famous game designer let us know at IQSecrets@aol.com

REVIEWING THE LATEST RELEASES IN GAMING

The Hercules & Xena Roleplaying Game

West End Games are the undisputed kings of licensed gaming. They've done "Star Wars." They've done "Men In Black." They've done "Tank Girl" and "Tales From The Crypt," for chrissakes! Now, they're tackling "Hercules: The Legendary Journeys" and "Xena: Warrior Princess," two of the most popular television shows in syndication, in their latest RPG.

"Yiyiyiyiyiyi!"

The game system is based on WEG's d6 rules; fans of the Star Wars RPG and the other d6 games will recognize elements like the wild die, character points and Fate points which act like Force points do in Star Wars. The main difference between d6 and H&X is in the use of the custom Hercules & Xena dice in determining success or failure. Each die has two Hydra head icons and four Chakram ("the round killing thing") icons. After rolling, the player counts the number of Chakrams; if the total exceeds the GM's set difficulty number, the action succeeds. This minimizes the amount of addition that players need to do and speeds up play. On the downside, you need enough H&X dice for all your players, which might mean sharing dice during a game. (Or buying more dice. Ka-ching!)

The Player's Guide contains everything a player needs to create a hero, including over 20 hero types, a comprehensive list of Grecian names, several races from which to choose, brief skill descriptions, examples of special combat moves from the TV show and an optional system of advantages and disadvantages for detailing characters. The remainder of the book is a guide to the Ancient World, including stats for the show's main characters, the Joxer song and brief notes on the gods. The flair and attitude of the narrator make reading this rulebook enjoyable. Just check out the fine print on the money-back guarantee for spears.

The Game Master's Book contains the meat of the system rules. There are chapters on skills, creating adventures, running combat, another overview of the Ancient World, expanded notes on the gods and statistics for the more memorable villains of the Ancient World. This book is mostly game rules, plus tips for fledgling gamemasters to simulate the action of the TV show.

The Hercules & Xena RPG, like the TV show, is action packed. Although a little simplistic for hardcore players, it's an excellent game for first-timers and those apt to come up with wacky solutions for situations. Plus, at only 30 dinars, it's a bargain that would make the merchant Salmoneous blush. ■ Chris Doyle

HERCULES & XENA RPG

PUBLISHER: WEST END GAMES
LEAD DESIGNER: GEORGE R. STRAYTON
GENRE: FANTASY
RELEASE: FEBRUARY 1998
SUGGESTED RETAIL: $30

THE GOOD

- Detailed roleplaying notes are provided for several gods. "Role-play Hermes like a late FedEx delivery guy on amphetamines!"
- The Thrill Scene game mechanic from Men In Black is here again. Instead of a difficulty number, a player needs to roll the Thunderbolt of Zeus on the "wild die" a certain number of times in a 10 second period. Excellent for actions that need to be performed in a short amount of time.
- The solitaire adventure is an outstanding method to teach game mechanics.
- Enjoyable to read and easy to understand.

THE BAD

- The customized dice that are necessary to play. Don't tell Hera, but to substitute a standard six-sider, 1-2 are Hydra and 3-6 are Chakrams. On the wild die, a 1 is the Eye of Hera and the 6 is the Thunderbolt of Zeus.
- A few more examples of game mechanics would have gone a long way to facilitate learning the system.

THE UGLY

- Overall, the system encourages a "make up the rules on the fly" position as opposed to one with well-defined game mechanics. Although this is an advantage for inexperienced gamers, most veteran players would probably be disappointed at the lack of charts, statistics and conversion factors.

The Fajo Collection

"Be the only kid on your block with a Roger Maris card."

With First Contact in stores less than a month, Decipher has released The Fajo Collection, an extremely limited set of 18 cards for the Star Trek Customizable Card Game. Although certainly targeted towards the collector—only 40,000 copies will be printed—with so many powerful cards, many of these sets will see more play time than shelf time.

Players will be thrilled that there really isn't a card in the set that should remain unplayed for long. There are a lot of favorites, like Lore and Locutus of Borg, and a few cards whose power will show after time. One of the more underrated cards is Spot, Data's cat on the show. She may look innocent, but she can "pounce" on any one personnel present, and disable them for the turn. Yow! "Hey, Mr. 10 Strength with the Type III Phaser Rifle! Yeah, I'm talking to you! Sit down! Meow!" (Did I mention that she has nine lives?)

The Fajo Collection introduces the first dual personnel card (the Sisters of Duras has two people on one card, and they're also dual affiliation), the first dual-type card (an interrupt/event), the first triple affiliation personnel and the first Q's Artifact. It also introduces the nemesis icon, where certain cards are made to battle each other.

The most exciting part of this set is how each card was designed with a lot of attention to detail. From Guinan's vibrant yellow hat to the metallic ink on Picard's Artificial Heart to the bubble gum included with the 1962 Roger Maris Baseball Card, you can tell that this is unlike any batch of cards ever made by the company. The picture of Geordi on DNA Metamorphosis even glows in the dark!

The set is shipped in an attractive binder that would look quite nice on a bookshelf. It includes a signed certificate of authenticity and a great rulesheet that has insider design notes, specific card rulings and even a full translation of the first card printed in Klingon!

This set will have a serious impact on the game, but its limited availability means that it may be a while before the cards show up in the majority of decks. Like the late night ads say, The Fajo Collection is not available in stores...so, if you want one, order yours today. ■ Jason Robinette

"A gold mine for Storytellers."

The Technomancer's Toybox

The Technomancer's Toybox ranges from hideous to sublime. Luckily for us, the hideous is almost all cosmetic and it's well worth getting past it to the rest. Toybox starts off with an engrossing but all-too-short story snippet. Just when I got into it, it said "to be continued." Usually, the stories in Mage books last long enough for you to feel satisfied, but wanting more. Not this time, though. I just wanted more.

Let's get the artwork out of the way early. It's typical for White Wolf, which is to say that it ranges from the awful to the amazing (heavier on the good though, this time), and the cover art should be taken out, riddled with bullets, then dissolved in acid.

Each section is introduced by "Doctor Volcano," a Virtual Adept with a lot of information he isn't supposed to have. Unfortunately, in the first part, he comes across like a pre-pubescent boy with a "WE IZ KOOL" attitude. (This harks back to the main problem with the VA's: Too many of them come across this way.) Luckily, he gets better later.

When I said that it's well worth getting past the cosmetic problems to the rest of the book, I meant it. It starts out with a brief-but-useful section on mechanics related to the use and creation of Devices, then moves on to the Devices themselves. I was afraid going in that it was going to read like the small sections of Devices in other White Wolf books: Short descriptions that, while mildly useful, aren't very interesting. I was wrong. The descriptions of the Devices are long, filled with plot hooks, background and interesting characters, restricting the nitty-gritty game details to a brief paragraph or two at the end. This is a gold mine for Storytellers.

Yes, some of the Devices look like they could be abused by power-gamers ("The Ragnaroc Home Security System" and "The Chopper")—until, that is, you read the restrictions and side-effects. Then there are the things that look like cheesy B-movie inventions ("Telepathy Specs" and "Vrum Vrum Boom")... but again, only until you read the full description. Then the cheesy becomes horrifying and the laughable transforms into the terrifying.

Toybox takes a dubious idea and makes something wonderful out of it. Get past the cover and Doctor Volcano's intro (complete with smileys) and bury yourself in it. ■ Heather Grove

Noblesse Oblige: The Book of Houses

"Better living through elfin politics?"

Politics. Intrigue. Nasty name-calling behind intricate masks of courtly kindness. If you thought the sidhe weren't complicated enough to begin with, you need Noblesse Oblige: The Book of Houses.

Noblesse Oblige is a detailed and entertaining, if occasionally obscure, look at the five Seelie houses that rule the Fae Court. The history and the legends surrounding the founding of each house are given, as well as their political leanings, biographies of important members and the real stories behind the laws the houses supposedly uphold.

The stories are well-written and the art is exceptional. Each house has its own style and areas of interest, reflected both in the style of writing and in the content. House Dougal's chapter is a rambling monologue of the history of the fae, told by one of their nobles, while the Fiona's tale is told in sweeping epics, secret love letters and juicy court gossip. This does occasionally lead to holes in the information, though, and the authors left House Liam as the least fleshed-out house.

Unfortunately, the pretty stories in Noblesse Oblige are just that—pretty stories, nothing more. No rules and very few game mechanics are added, nor are many of the details in the book of the sort that would be useful in constructing plots for a game. When rules are mentioned, the reader is often simply referred to other books. Also, the doings of the noble houses are not of much interest to the commoners, and the nobles tend to think more on the scale of generations than months or years. As background information it's interesting, but that's about it.

This is not to say that the book is worthless; for some sidhe players or storytellers heavily interested in intrigue and political plots, it may be useful. Buy it for the art. Read it for the stories. But unless you're a believer in better gaming through elfin politics, don't expect it to radically improve your game. ■ Rebecca Schoenberg

GURPS Bio-Tech

Want to build your own replicants like those in "Bladerunner" or your own human-alien hybrid like Ripley or her "child" in "Alien Resurrection"? This book is for you.

GURPS Bio-Tech is not what you might expect. There are no "generic" body parts or abilities to be plugged into your science-fiction game—only specific, highly detailed ones. Instead, Bio-Tech begins with a timeline that stretches from before A.D. 1450 through today and then beyond. Technological advances occur at certain periods, both known historical events and those possible in the future. All the genetic and biotechnological modifications are fit into these periods and allow you to limit the technology available at certain times during your setting.

"Remove your male character's most valuable asset from harm's way."

The abilities this book provides for gamemasters or players to engineer their characters are far-reaching and diverse; they range from the predictable, such as the mere modification of cosmetic appearance or statistical abilities and cloning, to the obscure-yet-useful like "Testicle Tuck," which allows you to remove your male character's most valuable asset from harm's way. Details such as monetary cost, recuperation time and technological level required are provided for each ability or modification.

The outcomes and lists of possible genetic manipulation are invaluable in themselves, but this supplement goes beyond that. Do you want to play the tinkerer instead of the tinkeree? Great. There's a section of character classes based around the genetic-modification aspect: genginneers, gene cops that regulate the use of the technology, bioterrorists and so on. There are also sections on sciences related to immortality and the preservation and extension of life. Maybe you want an engineered plant or animal companion instead? The directions are here.

The bibliography in Bio-Tech is aces in the hard-science department, but it skimps in the fiction areas and disregards the rich tradition of films dealing with the subject; this is somewhat disappointing, as this is usually one of the more informative sections in a GURPS supplement. The art is typical, neither here nor there, but the rest of the book more than makes up for it; it's a must read for SF writers as well as gamers. You may go into this supplement looking for a way to merely give your character claws or a tail, but you'll come away singing "Hello Dolly"...and know how to clone her. ■ Brent Fishbaugh

"Big robots are for fighting!"

Heavy Gear, 2nd Edition

In the middle of 1994, the first edition of Heavy Gear was released. Finally, BattleTech had some competition for the "big robot fighting game" market. Thirty months, an Activision computer game and an official storyline book later, Dream Pod 9 decided it was time for a bit of refinement.

Heavy Gear isn't just a roleplaying system; it's also a tactical combat game: Big robots are for fighting! In fact, most of the book details how combat works and lists various weapons for players to use. The "campaign rules," for the most part, exist merely to give a GM an excuse for battle after battle. The Heavy Gear universe isn't as entrenched in warfare as, say, the Warhammer 40K milieu, but it's close.

If you're looking for a good, fun, clean miniatures system, Heavy Gear has a lot to offer; the rules cover military action from infantry to tanks to the giant robots everybody loves, and there are rules examining nearly every aspect of the battlefield, from aquatic terrain to extreme temperature conditions to swarms of creatures.

If you're looking for an awesome roleplaying system, Heavy Gear might not be the thing for you. Characters tend to start out somewhat already developed, so the joys of building a character from the ground up just aren't here... Heck, there's only one page devoted on how to hand out experience points (one or two points per adventure). Numerous templates of sample characters are provided, but after the first few, they all look pretty much the same. Sure, you can build yourself a bookworm-type character but, sooner or later, you know you're going to get into a firefight, so combat skills are all but mandatory.

The dice system, the "Silhouette" system, lets you roll one die for every point you have in a given skill and take the highest roll, modified by any talent the character has. It's a cool system that allows a really talented character to exceed the ability of a really experienced character occasionally. Unfortunately, if a character gets just a few more pluses than usual, he goes from "good soldier" to "war god," which means GMs need to be extra careful when doling out experience points and training.

As a sci-fi roleplaying game, Heavy Gear runs a little light. However, if you're tired of 100-ton mechs punching each other because their weapons suck so badly, Heavy Gear is right up your alley. ■ Rick Moscatello

Marvel Super Dice

"The X-Men strike out."

"One fastball special comin' up!"

That's the patented Colossus-throws-Wolverine maneuver from the X-Men comic series. However, in this premiere release of the Marvel Super Dice CDG, the X-Men strike out. Serious problems arise both with the game's relationship to comics and with the contents of the game itself.

The connection between the game and Marvel's characters is tenuous. The "superhero" aspect is built around "character dice." The faces of comic book characters are engraved into one side, but they are often unrecognizable even after scrutiny and difficult to tell apart at a glance. About half of the time, the powers of these characters are boring or don't fit the character. While Colossus' power adds to his teammate's and simulates the "fastball special" decently enough, Tessa (a minor villainess at best) has a major power that lets her reroll some of her opponent's dice and add them to her team. The Blob's power fits him; he's big and immobile—but is that fun to play?

Another flaw is the importance of "normal" dice, less powerful dice that represent normal people present at a battle and how they interfere. Though normals can be removed from the game easily during battles, conflicts often come down to who has the most normals remaining for use. This is not good. We want to play superheroes.

The rules are often confusing and the victory condition that allows a player to win based on the number of battle zone points he possesses often degenerates into a simple game of "war" with dice. And for almost 15 bucks, you barely get enough to play the beginners' "Clobberin' Time" game, so you really need to buy two sets. Thirty hard-earned greenbacks is way too much for this game.

I still have high hopes for the rules expansions and new dice in the Avengers supplement due out in late spring, but the repetitive and unexciting gameplay, the disappointing execution of the comic book theme and the price all signal the doom of the X-Men. ■ Brent Fishbaugh

Providence

When the booklet for Providence hit game stores, it looked like an In Nomine clone with its vaguely religious title and artwork featuring angelic and demonic-looking creatures. It was easy to assume that it was another game in the Holy War tradition. Not even close. It's a fantasy game with superheroic elements, a worthy debut from XID Creative.

"'Thundercats' with wings."

The world of Providence is located on the inside of a sphere, with the sun somewhere near the center, speared on one of the pillars that hold up the sky. The "floor" of the sphere is covered with jungle, except where the oceans well from the bottom. (Don't think about it too hard. Chalk it up to magic and move on.) The inhabitants belong to various troupials, or races, which are associated with the animal kingdom and have powers and personalities to match. Noble eaglefolk, mischievous ratfolk, delicate swanfolk, etc. It's a lot like "Thundercats" with wings.

The society of troupials is segmented into castes and primed for revolution; those with wings lord them over those without 'em, those who can fly feel superior to those who must glide, and those with feathery wings are in conflict with those with leathery ones. Add in a handful of indigenous creatures with an axe to grind and you've got a setting rife with conflict.

The character generation system for Providence is "crunchy," with lots of point-manipulation, advantages and disadvantages and adjustable power levels. The rules also include a magic system, detailing four methods of spellcasting that mesh well with the world.

However, not all is glorious in Providence. The Shard mechanic that adds DC Heroes-style powers to this low-fantasy world is wholly out of place. Why have powers beyond those of mortal men when you aren't mortal men? All it does is add raw power to the setting which the spellcasting system offers already.

Secondly, the Main Rule Book gives the system and little else. If you're looking for information on the world or its peoples, you'll need to buy the Main World Book for another 30 smackers.

Providence is a beautiful game with lots of gorgeous art, and has the elements to be a solid fantasy game. However, as long as the history and world data aren't included in the main book and the shoulda-been-optional Shards are, you'll have to spend $60 for a playable game. That's trouble in paradise. ■ Jason Schneiderman

Three Stooges Card Game

This wacky non-collectible card game allows three or more players to slug it out Stooge style. Each player plays cards representing Stooge "maneuvers" from the "Moe Eye Poke" to "Look At The Ground," in an attempt to be the last Stooge standing. Archangel Entertainment. 60 cards. $8.95.

Vampire: Dark Ages: Dark Tides Rising

This first of the "Transylvania Chronicles" series gives your coterie the chance to ally with the Tremere, the Ventrue or the Tzimisce (pronounced "Wally"). This four-part series will eventually cross over with the modern Vampire setting. White Wolf. 120 pages. $15.

Victory

A fast-paced strategy game using wooden block playing pieces. You command various army, navy and air units in an attempt to outmaneuver your opponent. Designed for maximum play value and not based on a historical situation. (No kidding. Who would command a force of wooden blocks? The Playskool Liberation Army?) Columbia Games. $39.

Werewolf Players Guide, 2nd Edition

You asked for it... Heck, some of you even howled for it. And now it's here: the updated handbook for White Wolf's game of savage horror. Sure to be included are second edition compatible rules for all those other shifter races, including those who won't get their own breedbooks. White Wolf. $22.

Babylon 5 Component Game System

"The next, best hope for a good B5 game."

Heard about the new Babylon 5 hamster wheels? The license has been passed around to so many different companies that it probably won't be long before those, as well as Londo chew toys, show up in your local pet store. In the meantime, yet another game company has been given a crack at turning the popular sci-fi television series into a fun, playable game. Component Game Systems isn't the last but, so far, it is the best hope for a good B5 game.

In the initial set of the Babylon 5 Component Game System (B5CGS), you can represent the Earth Alliance, Centauri Republic, Narn Regime or Minbari. Your goal is to accumulate the most influence (measured by wealth) in the galaxy by building bases at designated planets. Players construct the map-board by placing hexagonal map-pieces face-down. Sections of the map are flipped face-up as they are encountered, revealing such elements as gravity waves and deadly asteroid fields.

Building bases is the key to victory; the more you have, the more money you produce. The more money you produce, the more ships you can build to whup your opponents. Each side has a variety of ships, ranging from fighter squadrons to mammoths like the Minbari War Cruisers, equipped with jump engines and a dangerous array of weaponry.

The game is supplemented by your own customized deck of cards, including crew cards (popular characters from the show), various events and vote cards which, given support, can sway the balance of the B5 universe. The cards, along with each side's special abilities, really help give the game the feel of "Babylon 5." Recognizable characters abound and they're easy to put into play and use—a definite bonus.

My biggest complaint is that the game is often cumbersome. The direction your ships face plays a very important part in the rules for the game. This is fine for combat, but when it comes to movement and building bases, having to waste a turn rotating your ships is boooring. Using the counters included with the set to keep track of your finances will make your head explode; dice are better, but the bookkeeping is still a pain. B5CGS games take a while to develop, and combat uses less dice than I prefer, but sending out a fleet to destroy your opponent's stuff is always fun. And of all the licensed Babylon 5 games—and there are quite a few of them—none capture the feel of the show better than B5CGS. Given a choice between this game and a chew toy, hey—I'd choose the game. ■ Jeff Hannes

Without honor, one can live many years. Without water, one can live three days.

Hot, arid winds blow from a land far beyond the Emerald Empire of Rokugan.

Whispers on the wind tell tales.

To some, it seems a land filled with adventure.

To others, a desolate vision of unending pain.

KING of the MOUNTAIN

InQuest crowns the top 10 Magic decks of all time

Remember playing that brainy game King of the Mountain when you were a kid? You know, one genius stands on a picnic table and everyone else tries to throw him off so they can be the next target? Sure, everyone gets their moment of glory, but one kid usually ends up spending the bulk of the time at the top—like the really fat kid that no one can move or that slimy guy who kicks everyone in the kneecaps before they can knock him down.

Well, throughout the history of tournament play, Magic decks have had that kind of competition. Hundreds of deck designs have come and gone over the past four years, but only a few have really had the power to dominate. What makes a deck great? It's not just whether it has Moxes or not—it's how much it trounces an even field of play.

We've searched through the archives to come up with the 10 best tournament decks of all time, based on how well they did in their day compared to other decks constructed in the same format. So while Demonic Hordes might not do too well in today's tournament field, in '94 it was one of the big-time cards. Likewise, Black Vise/Howling Mine/Stormbind decks never did too well in Type I, but man, did they dominate Type II for a while!

Ready for a trip down Magic memory lane? Last deck standing wins...

10 Big Beef Land Destruction

Type: Type I/Classic
Lifetime: Early 1994 to Spring 1994

Function: This deck was crude, rude and mean in its day. It starts out by axing a few land and then putting out the big beef creatures. Defense? Defense is putting out an even bigger creature to pound your opponent with. With Moxes and Dark Rituals, a first-turn Juggernaut or Juzam Djinn is not uncommon. Once you have enough mana, bring on the Demonic Hordes—with Instill Energy they can knock off two lands a turn; once your opponent's real estate is cleared out, the Hordes gear up for the attack.

Dominance: In a time when no one played with Swords to Plowshares because white was "too weak," a first-turn Juggernaut or Juzam Djinn could spell your opponent's doom. Plus, a lot of players didn't have a full set of Moxes, which made the landkill that much more effective.

Repercussions: Landkill was the first universally-accepted tournament strategy. Before focused landkill decks hit the scene, players just came up with the best deck they could make with the cards they owned. Decks like this one made players realize that a well-planned theme could win you a tournament.

ProsBloom 9

Type: Mirage/Visions Constructed
Lifetime: Spring 1997

Function: One of the few pure combo decks to do really well in—and actually win—a big tournament, the ProsBloom deck wins by blowing your opponent away with a huge Drain Life. The rest of the deck is geared to generate enough mana while protecting the combo, which goes something like this: First get Squandered Resources into play. Then sacrifice all your land and cast Natural Balance. Sacrifice more mana, dump it all into a big Prosperity and then ditch cards to a Cadaverous Bloom to get even more mana. Continue casting Prosperities or Infernal Contracts as necessary and, once you've got enough mana, fire off the Drain Life. While all this is going on, make sure you've got a City of Solitude in play so your opponent is reduced to staring at you, dumbfounded.

Dominance: ProsBloom became popular almost immediately after Visions came out and was the deck of choice among many of the top players at Pro Tour Paris. ProsBloom is still one of the more popular Type II decks, although it was at its peak in the limited Mirage/Visions environment.

Repercussions: Shortly after the Paris Pro Tour, Squandered Resources, the motor that makes this deck go, was banned in Mirage/Visions and Mirage/Visions/Weatherlight tournaments. The DCI has considered banning it in Type II as well.

8 Bazaar Reanimator

Type: Type 1.5/Classic Restricted
Lifetime: Early 1997 to Present

Function: Reanimator decks have always been around in one form or another, but Bazaar of Baghdad is the key to this deck. Early on, it lets you get enough creatures in your graveyard to begin recursion of the Ashen Ghouls and Nether Shadows. Meanwhile, the cheap Animate Deads and Shallow Graves allow you to bring back nasty beasts like the Crimson Hellkite or Deep Spawn, or even a second-turn Nicol Bolas. Later in the game, the Bazaars can be used to give you card advantage as you can return the Krovikan Horror to your hand and continually discard it with the Bazaar to draw more cards.

Dominance: Designed in early 1997, the Reanimator deck is still one of the best decks to play in Type 1.5. Raw speed helps this deck stomp any challenge, and in longer games most decks are unable to thwart the Bazaar/Ghoul/Shadow combo.

Repercussions: The success of this deck was one of the springboards for the Buried Alive strategy which players took advantage of once Weatherlight was released.

Vise Age 7

Type: Type II/Standard
Lifetime: Summer 1995 to Early 1996

Function: Named "Vise Age" because it took advantage of some of the more powerful cards in the then-new Ice Age set, this deck tries to deal as much damage as early as possible before finishing off the opponent with Erhnams, Orggs and direct-damage. First-turn Black Vises are the pride and joy of this deck—a first-turn Strip Mine/Vise is even more likely to ensure victory. Once the deck gets rolling, Howling Mines serve to replenish your hand as well as keep your opponent scrambling under the pressure of a Vise or two. Those extra cards are also prime for powering Stormbind, one of the hallmark cards of a Vise Age deck. Tinder Walls and Orcish Lumberjacks give the deck the ever-important speed element, and Jokulhaups serves as a reset button in the rare instances you fall behind.

Dominance: For a several-month period in the fall of 1995, Vise Age was the dominant deck in Type II. One of the first questions players had to consider when constructing a tournament deck was, "What will my deck do against a first-turn Black Vise?" Those that couldn't find a good answer were usually trounced.

Repercussions: Because this deck was so dominant, Black Vise was restricted in Type II, opening up a whole new realm of possibilities in deck design. If Black Vise hadn't been restricted, decks like the Necrodeck wouldn't have existed.

6 The Rack/Balance Deck

Type: Type I/Classic
Lifetime: Winter 1994 to Spring 1995

Function: Yet another deck that proves that Bazaar of Baghdad doesn't suck, this red/white/green deck exploits Balance as a Mind Twist, Wrath of God and Armageddon all rolled into one two-casting-cost card. Quickly reduce your hand-size with the Bazaar and by firing Lightning Bolts and Chain Lightnings at your opponent. Once you've found a Balance and knocked yourself down to one card, cast the Balance to wipe out your opponent's hand and his army. Mishra's Factories and Racks keep the damage coming and, by the time your opponent recovers, you can Balance again.

Dominance: This deck, brought to fame by the 1995 Southeast Regional Champion Adam Maysonet, dominated through speed and a rather atypical method of library-manipulation. By using the Bazaar of Baghdad's disadvantage as a benefit, this deck was able to stomp most competitors.

Repercussions: This deck was one of the first to utilize Balance as a power card. Before this deck became popular, white was often snubbed in tournament play. The brutal effectiveness of Balance made players reconsider the value of playing white.

Erhnamgeddon 5

Type: Type II/Standard
Lifetime: Fall 1995 to Spring 1997

Function: Slow and steady wins the race with this green/white control deck. Start by building up a mana supply with Elves and Fellwar Stones. Plop down a big creature like, say, an Erhnam Djinn, then fire off an Armageddon. When your opponent builds his forces back up again, lather, rinse, repeat. Meanwhile, Zuran Orb and Ivory Tower keep the life coming in, and Land Tax lets you weed through your deck, helping you recover from the Armageddons or stripping out unwanted lands.

Erhnamgeddon decks usually take a long time to win—sometimes a big creature can blow your opponent away in five turns, but matches are usually much more drawn out, with you taking over when your opponent finally runs out of ways to destroy your creatures or counter your strategy.

Dominance: Few decks have stood the test of time longer than Erhnamgeddon. Even when key elements in the deck have been restricted, banned or cycled out of tournament play, the basic form of the deck has remained constant. This deck has survived losing Land Tax, Swords to Plowshares and even the Erhnam Djinns. As long as Armageddon is tourney-legal, this deck archetype will be a force to reckon with.

Repercussions: Many cards have become casualties of the restricted or banned because of this deck, including Zuran Orb and Land Tax.

4 Kird Ape/Channelball

Type: Type 1.5/Classic
Lifetime: Spring 1994 to Fall 1995

Function: It's not every Type I deck that can afford to go without two of the five Moxes, but with 18 one-casting-cost spells, this one can. Like a prize fighter, this deck comes on strong early, delivering blow-after-blow with Giant Growthed Kird Apes and Elvish Archers. The brutal efficiency of spells like Time Walk, Ancestral Recall and, in this deck especially, Timetwiser keep the motor running until it's Channel time. Or, if Channel is too risky, there are plenty of Fireballs and Disintegrates to do the job.

Dominance: During much of the time when this deck was popular, Type I was all about speed. While there were a few permission decks running around, most games were about who could kill who faster. The Kird Ape variety of the Channel/Fireball deck was by far the fastest.

Repercussions: In many ways this deck began the drive for efficient decks with speed and multiple paths to victory. It could win with creatures, big gouts of flame or the Channel/Fireball combo. Single-minded tournament decks were much less common after the success of this deck.

3 Titania/Balance Deck

Type: Type I/Classic
Lifetime: Fall 1994 to Spring 1995

Function: Like The Rack/Balance deck, this deck revolves around, you guessed it, Balance. With all the cheap artifacts, you're able to dump your hand early and quickly set up the Howling Mine/Relic Barrier combo. Pretty soon, you're out-drawing your opponent three or four cards to one. After that, it's just a matter of setting up the Winter Orb/Icy Manipulator lock. Any creatures your opponent manages to play are flushed by the Balances, and since you usually don't need more than one or two lands in play, the Balances function as an Armageddon as well. Once you've got 20 casting-cost worth of artifacts in play and your opponent is completely shut down, drop the Titania's Song and it's game over.

Dominance: In a time when land destruction and permission decks were all the rage, the Titania deck was easily able to deny them both. It always beat land destruction at its own game and was simply too fast for—and too good at locking down—permission decks. Abyss decks with their artifact creatures were also very popular at the time, but the Relic Barriers brought them to a grinding halt.

Repercussions: It was because of decks like this that Balance, at one time the most powerful card in the game, had to be restricted. The basic principles of this deck have more recently become popular in the deck archetype now knows as "The Prison."

2 The Deck

Type: Type I/Classic
Lifetime: Spring 1995 to Spring 1996

Function: "The Deck" was one of the original decks to center around the concept of card advantage. This deck, invented by current Pro Tour player Brian Weissman, counters or destroys anything played against it early on and avoids most attackers with Moat, while setting up a card-advantage lock involving at least one Disrupting Scepter. Eventually your opponent is reduced to one card in his hand; if he doesn't cast it during his turn, he'll lose it to the Scepter. Meanwhile, you're drawing several cards a turn with Jayemdae Tomes and the Library of Alexandria. Once the lock is set up, finish off your opponent with counterspell-protected Serra Angels or a Mirror Universe.

Dominance: This deck was able to deal with and beat virtually any type of tournament deck that came its way. It became the hallmark of carefully thought-out deck design, earning the simple designation, "The Deck."

Repercussions: The power of this deck taught players the importance of card-advantage in tournament play. Just about every permission deck created since has been based upon The Deck's original principles.

The Necrodeck 1

Type: Type II/Standard
Lifetime: Spring 1996 to Fall 1996

Function: Although there have been several variations, all Necrodecks rely on the same key element—card advantage. With the help of Necropotence, you can outdraw your opponent, eventually bringing him to his knees with more creatures than he is able to block or eliminate. Hypnotic Specters, Hymn to Tourachs and Strip Mines thwart your opponent's strategy early on, allowing you to build up before dropping the Necro. Once in play, cards like Ivory Tower and Zuran Orb keep the life flowing in and, if need be, Nevinyrral's Disk is there to get rid of the Necro. In the meantime, a steady stream of Black Knights, Orders of the Ebon Hand and similar creatures pick apart your opponent's life total. When you run low on cards, you simply drop the Necro, fill your hand back up to seven and get back to business.

Dominance: There have been hundreds of deck designs over the years and some, like the ones in this article, have become mainstream. None have dominated more than the Necrodeck. How popular was Necro? At the 1996 World championships, over 65 percent of the field was playing a Necro-deck. To this day variants of the original Necro-deck are still popular, even though most of the key elements have been stripped out.

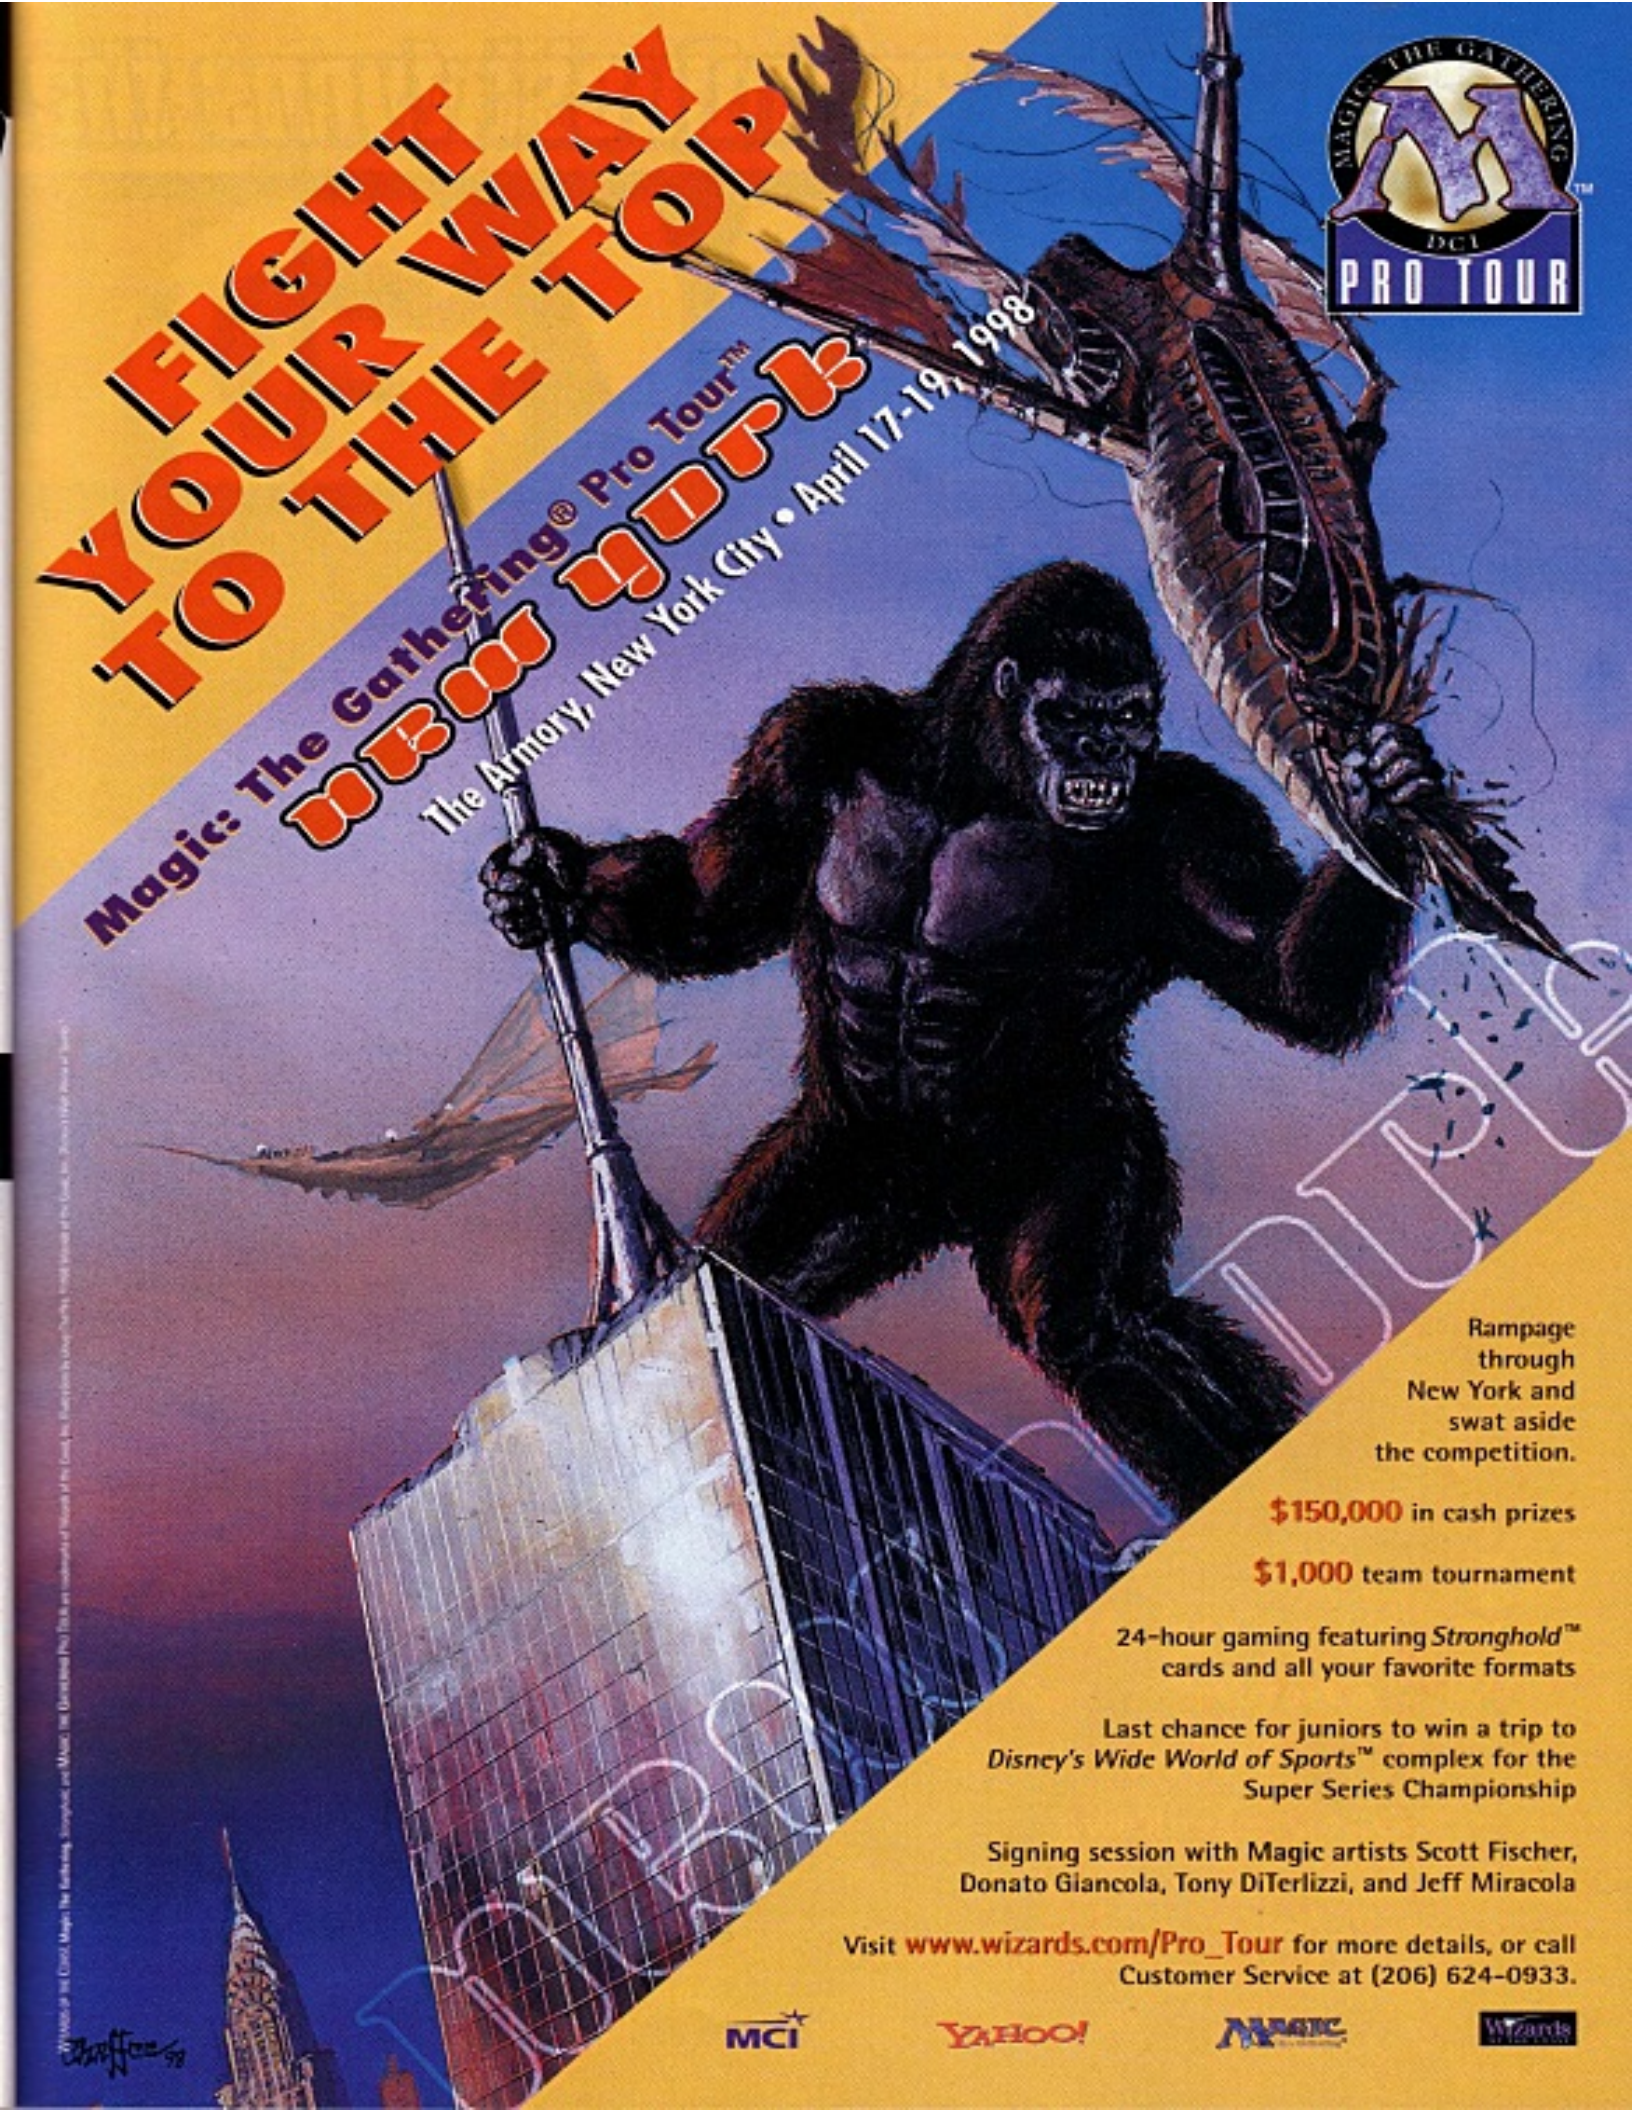

Repercussions: It was little surprise when Hymn to Tourach and Strip Mine, two of the deck's key cards, were restricted in September 1996. The ensuing DCI ruling which banned all restricted cards in Type II was no coincidence either.

InQuest turns the COVER

fans' favorite covers into cards

GIRLS

A near-naked vampire chick. A beckoning mummy. A female Conan approaching a ghastly citadel.

InQuest covers, each and every one of them. Sure, they look pretty and we love seeing the female bod, but a lot of thought goes into the image that adorns the front of our mag (at least, we like to think so). We try to tell a story with each cover, whether it's a baby dragon poppin' out of the egg or the mysterious Caterpillar Woman spinning a deadly web with one hand and shushing us with the other.

Of course, being cardfloppers and all, we always wondered "What kind of cool cards could we make out of these covers?" In honor of our third anniversary, let's take a nostalgic look back at a bunch of InQuest covers—and what the heck, we'll make up a CCG card for each one...

By the InQuest staff

Rampant VITAS Infestation
Cover: InQuest #1 Artist: John Bolton Game: Shadowrun
InQuest debuted with this beauty. The story goes that English fantasy painter John Bolton sent over his "final" sketch—and our vampire was butt-naked! We crapped our pants. Time was short and no one was answering on the Bolton line. Lucky for us, good ol' Mr. Bolton was just joking and put some clothes on the gal (just barely).

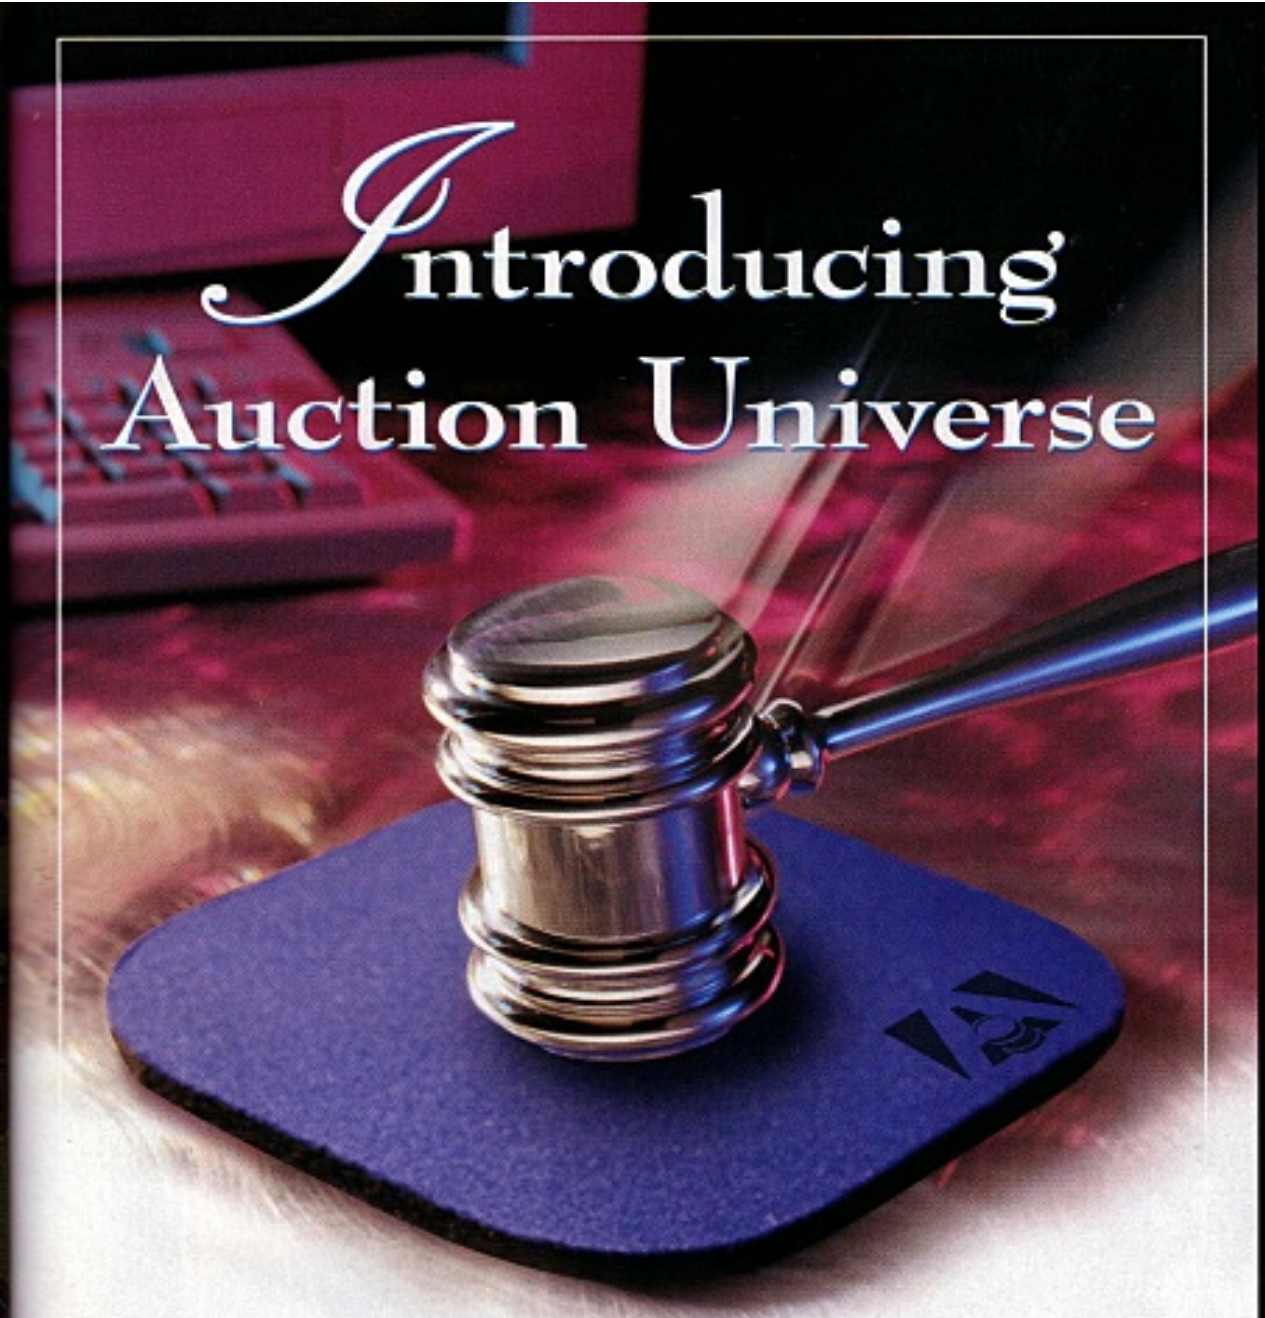

Elder Chaos Slug
Cover: InQuest #2 Artist: Anson Maddocks Game: Mythos
Anson Maddocks was King Magic Artist back in the early days of InQuest, so we asked him to paint us a weird creature. Believe it or not, his initial sketch was a little too tame—some drider-looking guy on a web—but when we told him to cut loose, he knocked our socks off with this bizarro, skull-in-the-slug monster.

Beckoning Mummy
Cover: InQuest #10 Artist: Fred Fields Game: Magic: The Gathering
Fantasy artist Fred Fields, recently hired as a staff illustrator for Wizards of the Coast, did one bang-up job on this baby! The alluring-yet-disturbing mummy won a 1996 Honorable Mention award for best newsstand cover. We got this cool plaque and everything.

Dragonslayer Barbie
Cover: InQuest #22 Artist: Larry Elmore Game: Magic: The Gathering
Out of the three year's worth of cover images, legendary fantasy artist Larry Elmore's "Dragonslayer Barbie" has garnered the biggest fan response. Could it be the way she carries that leather? Nah.

Birth of a Dragon
Cover: InQuest #25 Artist: Ed Beard Jr. Game: Legend of the Five Rings
Our second anniversary cover went through a whole bunch of artists who weren't confident they could pull off our conception—a newborn dragon cracking out of the egg and staring into momma dragon's giant eye. Fantasy painter Ed Beard vowed he could, and he certainly didn't disappoint.

Kur'lie Herdsman
Cover: InQuest #27 Artist: Fred Fields Game: Star Wars
We had no idea Fred Fields' cute-and-deadly, scrunchy-faced sandworm was a female. Alien physiognomy—go figure.

Pilara
Cover: InQuest #33 Artist: Alan Pollack Game: Legend of the Five Rings
Six months in the making, this cover was a true collaboration between the idea we started with and the final painting former TSR artist Alan Pollack delivered. Interesting enough, Alan's fiancée was the model for the Caterpillar Woman—from the waist up, that is.

Hidden Citadel
Cover: InQuest #36 Artist: Ed Beard Jr. Game: Middle-earth CCG
The idea for this cover began as a "find the hidden item" puzzle, then Ed Beard added his artistic flair, and voilà—a stunning painting with a moody, ominous castle threatening the female babe approaching it. How many fantasy items can you find in this issue's cover?

Riddle Me This

PERPLEXING YOUR PCs WITH PUZZLES, CIPHERS & RIDDLES

BY RICK SWAN

When roleplayers aren't skewering monsters or tallying their treasures, they're usually scrounging for information: the whereabouts of a reclusive wizard, the location of a secret passage, the translation of an arcane spell. No doubt about it: In a well-run campaign, there's info a-plenty they need to acquire.

So how do you, the gamemaster, make the info available? Well, you can opt for the easy way and spoon feed it to 'em by, for instance, having them "accidentally" stumble across the spell translation in a diary (boring), or allowing them to overhear the wizard's address while guzzling brew at a local bar (lame). Or you can make 'em work for it, presenting the info in the form of brain teasers which they have to unravel if they wanna get the goods. Not only do brain teasers force players to use their noodles, they contrast nicely with the physical challenges common to most campaigns, offering a fun alternative to the typical cavalcade of monsters and deathtraps.

Let's take a look at three categories of campaign-appropriate brain teasers: riddles (enigmatic questions requiring witty answers), ciphers (coded words whose letters have been substituted with different letters or unusual symbols) and visual puzzles (head-scratchers based on physical objects). We'll show you how they're used, give you some examples and explain how you can come up with your own.

RIDDLES

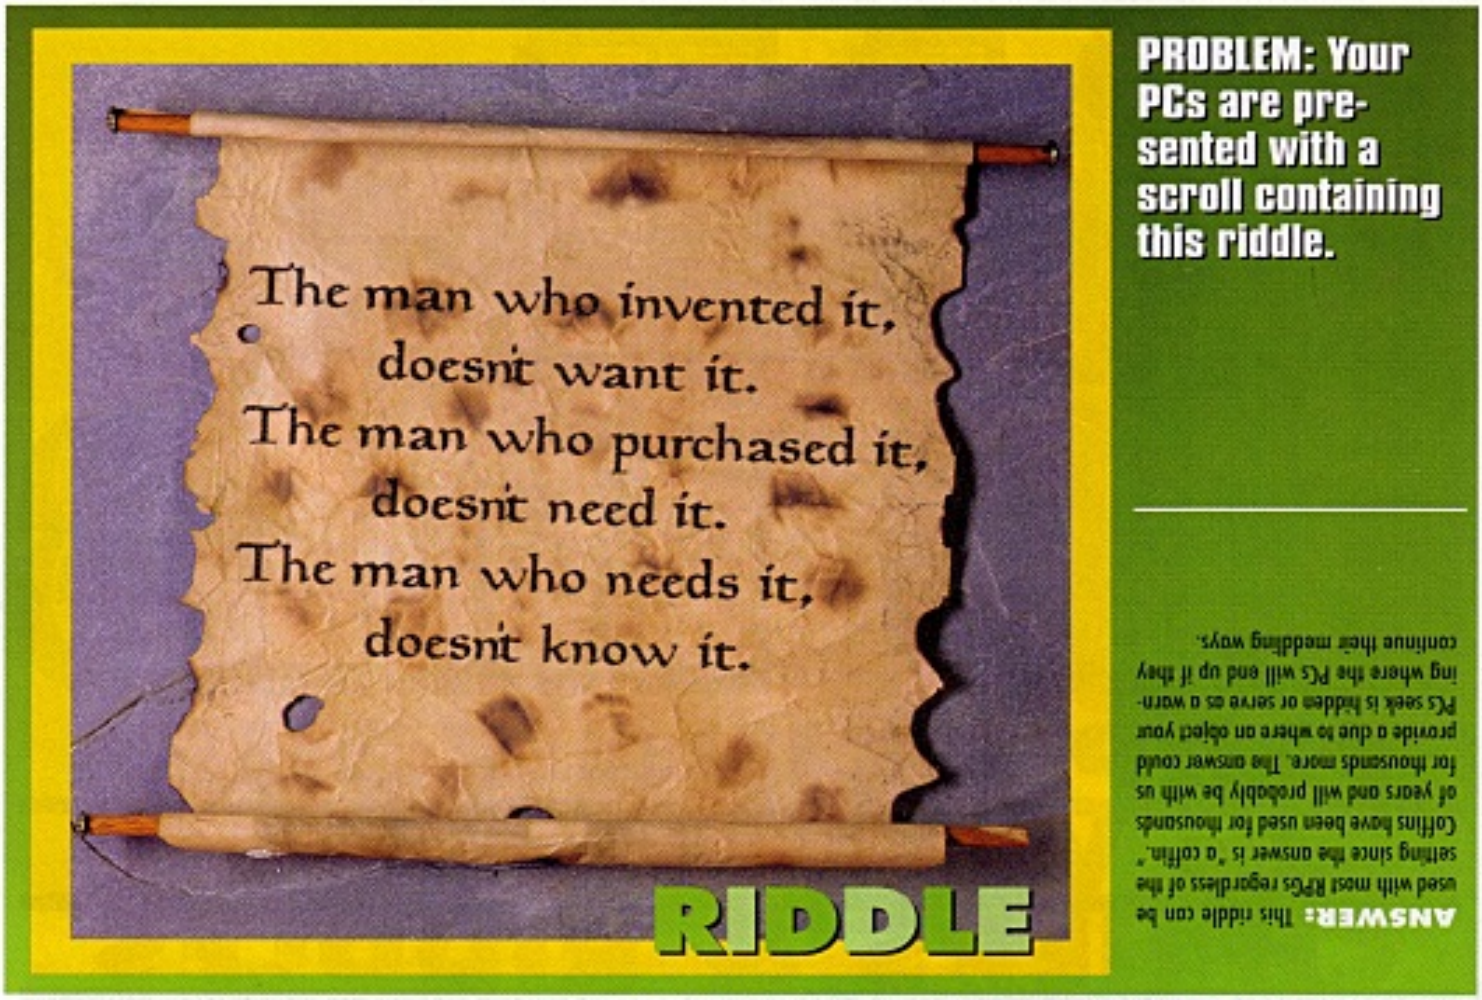

People have been tormenting each other with riddles since the dawn of civilization. In ancient Egypt, King Nectanebo challenged Lyccrus, king of Babylon, to settle their war with a riddle contest. (Lyccrus won, but he cheated.) Folks of the Middle Ages amused themselves with riddles to pass the time between famines and plagues. And Greek mythology spawned what is arguably the most famous riddle of all time when a grumpy Sphinx asked Oedipus Rex, "What has one voice, yet walks with four feet, then two, then three?" Oedipus correctly answered, "Man" (he crawls on all fours as a baby, stands as an adult and uses a cane as an old timer). The Sphinx responded by committing suicide, a true sore loser.

Fantasy literature, too, is rife with riddles, evidenced by this sample from Tolkien's "The Hobbit" where Gollum puts this to Bilbo:

What has roots that nobody sees,
Is taller than trees,
Up, up it goes,
And yet never grows?

So what the heck is it? A mountain, of course.

Riddles serve the same functions in roleplaying campaigns as they do in literature and history: to assess worthiness ("Only the truly intelligent are allowed to pass this way; let us determine if you qualify"), to tease ("Perhaps I will help you; that is, I might if you answer this") and to demonstrate arrogance ("Even if I dangle the secret in front of your face. I'm certain you're too stupid to figure it out"). And remember, campaign riddles don't have to be laugh-out-loud funny or chicken-across-the-road goofy. Just try to make 'em clever.

PROBLEM: Your PCs are presented with a scroll containing this riddle.

ANSWER: This riddle can be used with most RPGs regardless of the setting since the answer is "a coffin." Coffins have been used for thousands of years and will probably be with us for thousands more. The answer could provide a clue to where an object your PCs seek is hidden or serve as a warning where the PCs will end up if they continue their meddling ways.

METAPHOR RIDDLES

Both the Sphinx and Gollum used metaphor riddles—descriptions of everyday places, animals or objects couched in intentionally cryptic language. Though metaphor riddles appear in a variety of styles, they all share a common structure, making them pretty easy to create. Essentially, a metaphor riddle consists of two (or more) seemingly contradictory qualities of an object that, taken together, suggest a paradox. One quality tends to be specific ("taller than the tress"), the other vague ("never grows"). Or consider this one: "What has teeth but can't bite?" The specific quality is "teeth," the vague quality is "can't bite." (And the answer is "a comb.") Don't worry too much if a quality is sufficiently specific or vague; the important thing is to pinpoint a couple of qualities that seem to contradict each other.

To design your own metaphor riddle, begin with the solution; that is, the object the riddle describes. Let's say our object is "night." Start listing all the qualities of the object, keeping an eye out for a quality with a double meaning, a quality that might be interpreted in two different ways. So what about "night?" Well, let's see...it's dark, it's starry, it falls—aha! How about this?

What falls at dusk but makes no sound?

Let's try "chair." Hmm...it's furniture, you sit in it, it has four legs...bingo!

What has four legs yet always stands still?

See? With a little practice you can do this all day. By the way, if you're poetically inclined, consider tuning the riddle into a rhyming verse, which not only makes the riddle more evocative, but also gives the campaign an appealing Tolkeinesque flair. F'rinstance:

What falls at dusk
But makes no sound
Yet fills the sky
And cloaks the ground?

Gollum would be proud, don'cha think?

PUN RIDDLES

A simpler, though less satisfying, type of riddle is based on a pun. A pun is a word that has two strikingly different meanings depending on the spelling ("dear" and "deer") or context ("litter" can refer to a bunch of puppies or the stuff in a cat box).

To whip one up in a hurry, use the pun as the solution, then work backwards, constructing a question that incorporates both meanings of the pun. For instance, the dual meanings of "blue" suggest something along the lines of: Why does the ocean cry? Here's another: Which of the king's relatives is always up at dawn? Answer: the son (sun).

VARIANT RIDDLES

If writing riddles from scratch seems like too much effort, you can take the lazy way out and fool around with variants of existing riddles. This method might sound cheesy, but it can be surprisingly effective if you use words that evoke the campaign setting. Here, for example, are a trio of old favorites:

What word do people always say wrong?
(The word "wrong")

What is the middle of Paris? (The letter "R")

How do you spell frozen water with three letters? (I-C-E)

For a campaign set in Middle-earth, we make a few minor adjustments...

What word do hobbits always pronounce poorly? What lies in the center of Rivendell? How do you spell death with six letters? (S-a-u-r-o-n).

CIPHERS

DUIVMV JT JO UIF CBTFNFOU

Get it? If not, try replacing each letter with the one that comes before it in the alphabet (so D = C, U = T, etc.). This is an example of a substitution cipher, a common method of disguising a message so that it can only be read, in theory anyway, by a person who knows the system. Ciphers go back at least to ancient Greece, when Julius Caesar invented a substitution system for encoding orders to his troops. In the early 1600s, Cardinal Richelieu developed a set of punched cards that generated ciphers to conceal his personal correspondence. Ciphers have also been used to camouflage secret formulas, treasure locations, even love letters. They can fill similar functions in RPG campaigns.

SUBSTITUTION CIPHERS

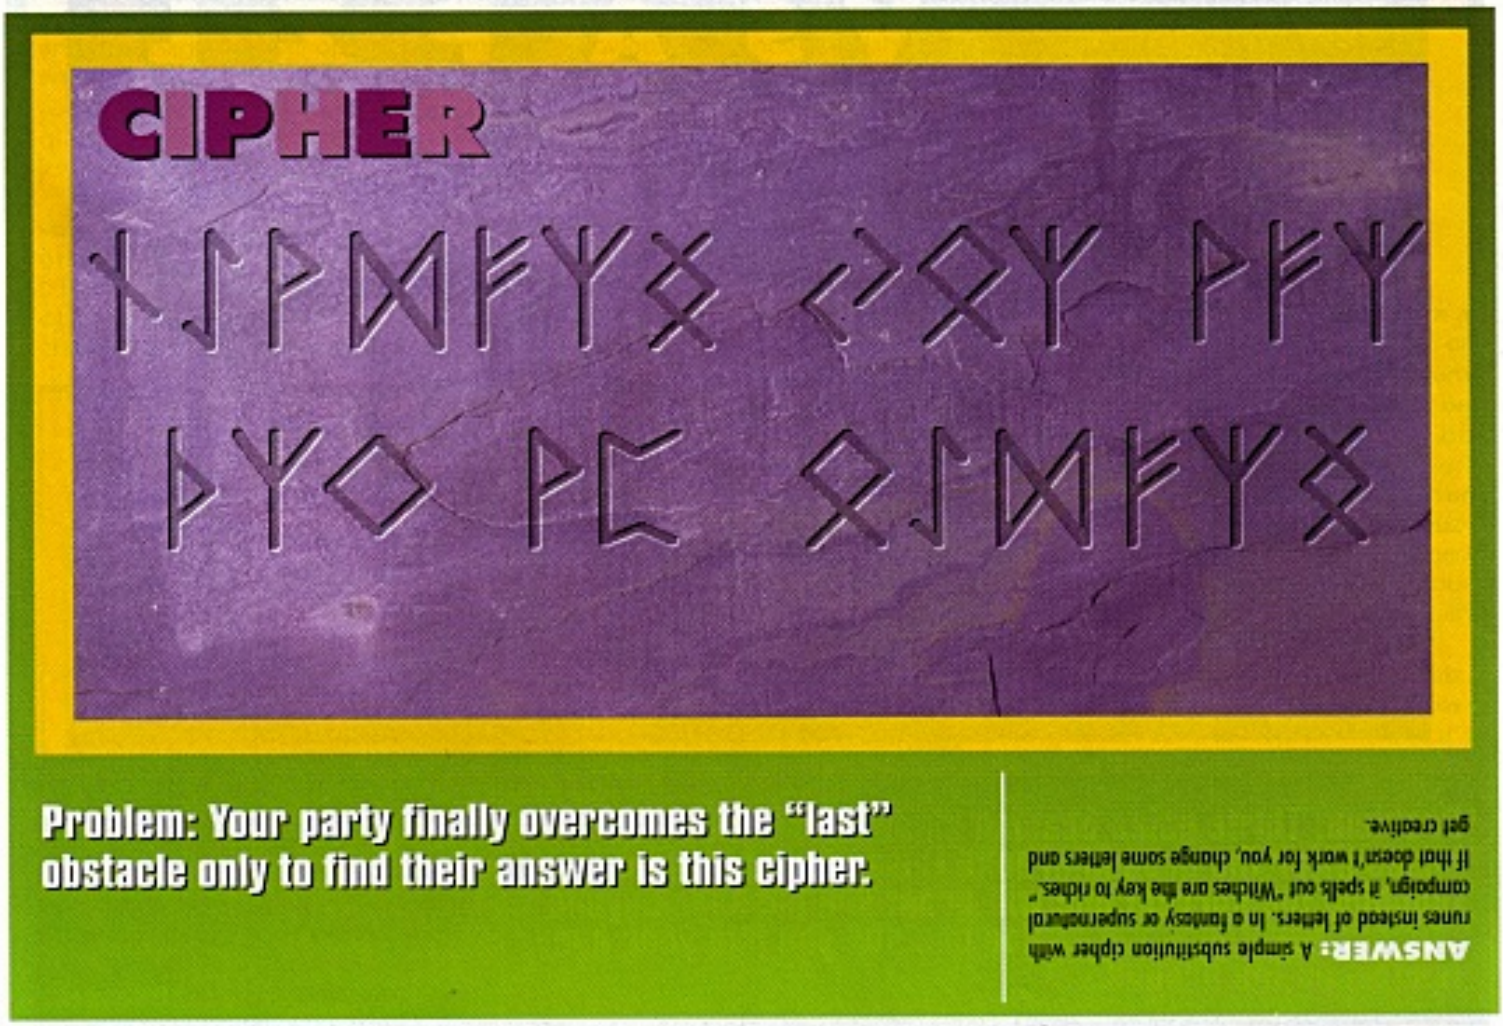

Any system of replacing one letter with another will do, so long as it's consistent; that is, if E = B in the first word, then E must represent B in all of the other words too. The cipher key, which should be made available to the message's intended recipient, simply consist of a list of the letters of the alphabet and the corresponding substitutions. You don't have to use letters as substitutions; you can use runes as we did in the illustration, numerals, punctuation marks or any symbols you like. In Arthur Conan Doyle's "The Adventure of the Dancing Men," Sherlock Holmes decoded a cipher comprised of stick figures.

To make a substitution cipher a bit more baffling, eliminate the spaces between the letters. Thus, DUIVMV JT JO UIF CBTFNFOU becomes DUIVMVJTJOUIFCBTFNFOU. Want it more aggravating still? Write the whole thing backwards (UOFNFTBCFIUOJTJVMVIUD). Alternately, you can clump the letters into arbitrary groups of, say, three (DUI VMV JTJ OUI FCB TFN FOU) or five (DUIVM VJTJO UIFCB TFNFO UBITE). Notice on that last example, we stuck a few phony letter (called nulls) on the end to make it come out even.

DATE CIPHERS

This one's a beauty: a snap to unravel if you have the key, nearly impossible if you don't. The key can be any six-digit number, but a calendar date, like Dec. 1, 1997, is best, since a typical campaign provides all kinds of opportunities to generate dates. Here's how it works.

1. Write out the date in numerical form—12/01/97—then eliminate the slashes. The resulting number, 120197, is the key.

Problem: Your party finally overcomes the "last" obstacle only to find their answer is this cipher.

ANSWER: A simple substitution cipher with runes instead of letters. In a fantasy or supernatural campaign, it spells out "Witches are the key to riches." If that doesn't work for you, change some letters and get creative.

2. Write out the message you want to encipher, then write the key underneath it, repeating as necessary.

KING SWAN IS DEAD
1201 97 1 2 01 9712

3. To encipher a letter, move forward in the alphabet a number of places equal to the number underneath. For instance, to encipher the K, move forward one space to get I. For I, move ahead two to get K. If the number is 0, the letter doesn't changes, so the N remains N. If you reach the end of the alphabet when counting forward, just start over at the beginning. An S shifted nine spaces becomes B, for example. The enciphered message, in its entirely: LKNH BDAP IT MEBF.

4. To decipher the message, the recipient merely writes the key underneath, then shifts the letters backwards through the alphabet the indicated number of places. Pretty slick, eh?

DECIPHERING

There are hundreds of encryption and encoding methods but, unless your players are exceptionally smart or given lots of help, the odds of them untangling even a date cipher are remote. Substitution ciphers, however, can be broken even by novices, providing the ciphered message is fairly lengthy (short messages are hard to crack because they have fewer recognizable word strings.)

A benevolent gamemaster should help players out by making available a list of the most common two-letter words, or making sure that one word is very obvious (see the bio box at the end of this article for an example).

VISUAL PUZZLES

Remember the opening of "Raiders of the Lost Ark" when Indy had to put just the right counterbalance on the pedestal in order to swipe the treasure? That's an example of a visual puzzle, a brain teaser tied to a physical object. Visual puzzles take a variety of forms. For instance, the solver might be asked to assemble the pieces of a broken statue, sort colored pebbles into the proper containers or determine which bridge leads safely over the abyss. Visual puzzles can have the same function as riddles—to show "worthiness" for example—but are better as obstacles players must overcome to achieve a short-term gain. Solving a visual puzzle to disable a trap, reveal a secret passage or open a locked door beats making a "observation" check any day.

But what makes a good visual puzzle? First, they all have tangible components, which can be anything from chess pieces (which the gamemaster may employ as props) to shards of magic crystal (which the gamemaster can describe or represent with colored paper). Second, they all require the solver to physically interact with the components. Though the possibilities are endless, here's a few to get you started.

Problem: Three poles bearing skulls block your path, bones litter the ground around them. You know that touching the correct one will grant you passage beyond this barrier, touch the wrong one and you join your bony friends on the ground.

ANSWER: One skull has been used as a perch by birds, as evidenced by their droppings. One skull has a fly on it. Both could be safe. Wanna get sneakier? The one with the fly on it is a trap since it's obviously a fake fly put their by the villain to trick your PCs. Sometimes things are exactly as they seem.

PUZZLE READING

Your local library should have plenty of riddle books which can serve as inspiration. Two good ones are, Fiddle with a Riddle by Janne Berstein, and The Game of Words by Willard R. Espy. There are also several web sites dedicated to riddles. Have your search engine look for the word riddle and you'll get more than you need.

For many different ways to encrypt words try to find a copy of Codes, Ciphers and Secret Writing by Martin Gardner. There are dozens of other good books available on this topic.

Visual puzzles can be found everywhere: Most fantasy computer games include them, RPG adventures often describe them and publications like Games magazine are filled with them (though they'll take a little adapting to fit into a roleplaying campaign).

MULTIPLE CHOICE PUZZLE

Probably the most common type of visual puzzle is the multiple choice test: Which of 10 coffins conceals the vampire? Which of two vials is poison, which is the antidote? Which door conceals the lady, which the tiger? Because most multiple choice puzzles consist of the same elements—a problem, several seemingly identical objects, and a clue that leads to the solution—they're reasonably easy to create.

Start with the problem. Let's say we're at the base of a mountain, facing three identical skulls mounted on poles, with bones scattered around them (see visual puzzle on p. 50). Touch the correct skull and a passageway will open granting entrance to the mountain and allowing your adventurers to go forward with their quest. Touch the wrong skull and you join the boneheads littering the ground.

Next you need to provide a clue, something that subtly distinguishes one option from the other. This is tricky. For starters, if the clue's too obscure, the players won't have a chance of figuring it out. Suppose, for instance, you mark one skull with a Tibetan death symbol. That's fine, presuming any of the characters is familiar with Tibetan death symbols.

How about scattering bones in front of only one of the poles? Duh. Too easy. No fun.

How about animal scratches or droppings, from, say, squirrels or birds—on one of the skulls? And maybe there's an insect on one of them. Now you're talking. A thoughtful player should be able to conclude that animals are using the skull as a perch; hence the scratched skull is safe. And since the insect hasn't been fried, that one too is OK. These clues are just right: not too obscure, not too obvious, and understandable with a little deductive reasoning.

SEQUENCE PUZZLE

Another nifty way to drive your players nuts is to make them perform a series of actions in a specific order. To activate a spell, for instance, they must polish the gems of a crown in a particular sequence. Or, to lower a drawbridge, they must pull the correct series of levers or punch the correct number of buttons. In other words, they can't solve the puzzle without ferreting out the pattern, which requires diligence and logic along with a fair amount of trial and error.

A tried-and-true type of sequence puzzle involves the navigation of floor tiles. To escape the room (or deactivate the trap or signal for help), the solver must step on colored (or numbered or oddly shaped) tiles in a certain order. For example, if the floor resemble a checkerboard, maybe the solver must avoid all the black tiles, or hop across it in a "Hopscotch" pattern. The possibilities are endless.

Numbered tiles lend themselves to a myriad of variants. Maybe the solver is only allowed to step on even-numbered tiles, or tiles divisible by three. Perhaps the values of the numbers are insignificant; maybe he must only step on numbers with circles in them (0, 6, 8 and 9). These type of puzzles are even better if you tie them into a bigger part of your campaign. Maybe the adventurers know the evil wizard serves the seven demons of H'gnarth, making that number (and anything it divides evenly into) bad news.

GETTING STARTED

Here's a few tips to successfully integrate riddles, ciphers and puzzles into your campaign:

- DO YOUR HOMEWORK. Don't attempt to improvise puzzles on the spot. Make 'em up in advance.
- APPEARANCE COUNTS. Any brain teaser that can be written down (like riddles and ciphers) looks especially cool when scribbled on a scroll. We've provided a few photo samples you can use right now but, if you wanna make your own, see "Creative Campaigning" in InQuest #32, which tells you how to manufacture sarcophagus-fresh scrollwork along with a cryptful of other way-cool props.
- DOUBLE-CHECK. Before the campaign gets underway, give your stumpers the once-over. Get rid of any unintentional ambiguities (if you refer to "stones" in the first line of a riddle, don't refer to "pebbles" in the next). Look for spelling errors (easy to make in ciphers). And be sure you remember all the answers (nothing's more embarrassing than forgetting how to solve your own puzzles).
- PLAY FAIR. Give the players a fighting chance of figuring out your brain teasers, which means no ciphers in Swahili and no puzzles with 100,000 pieces. Ideally, a puzzle has one, and only one, answer. And for God's sake, don't get cute and give them one that—surprise!—has no answer at all. Because they'll kill you. And you'll deserve it.

BRAINS OVER BRAWN

It doesn't matter if your players are a band of cavemen in 1,000,000 B.C. or a crackerjack Corporate Response Team in the far future, there will always be times when brain power should be more important than brawn power. And what better way to test your player's brains than with a good puzzle from your buds at InQuest? Armed with this article should be well on your way to devising some challenging brain teasers for your campaign.

Before we go, here's a pop quiz. Eliminate six letters from the following to reveal the name of InQuest's favorite paperweight.

SCORING

Okay sports fans (hey, Magic was on ESPN after all), multiply the number of questions you answered correctly by five to get your score. If you actually had to dig out cards to do the test, penalize yourself five points. If you picked "your house, your rules" give yourself a 10-point bonus for attitude.

91-100+: ICY MANIPULATOR
Shivan? Tapped 'im. Leviathan? Done him. Hell, you rule.

81-90: GRINNING TOTEM
It's hard to wipe that stupid smile off your face when you're always winning. Well, not always; occassionally an Icy shuts you down and reminds you who rules.

71-80: KNOWLEDGE VAULT
You know the difference between spellcasting and spelling, but need to bone up if you wanna run with the big hounds.

61-70: DARING APPRENTICE
You guessed a lot and manged a respectable score. Very good, grasshopper… now catch fly with chopstick.

51-60: MEMORY LAPSE
Remember the kid who always has his hand raised grunting "ooh, oooh, ooh, I know, I know," but when the teacher calls on him he's forgotten the question? That's you.

31-50: MARSH GAS
You're no moron, but until you learn a bit more about the game, you'll continue to be a weenie.

0-30: URZA'S MORON
You're still not sure what paper rectangles with weird drawings have to do with pulling bunnies from top hats. Bunnies pretty…

ANSWERS

1. B. Some of us think Circle is a viable enemy, though.
2. C. The Jungle deals first strike damage and gains +4/+4. It then makes 8 more Saproling Mana tokens to kill it off.
3. C. All the others are legitimate rumors. The Lake Hurricane is from the Summer Edition, and worth a pretty penny to collectors.
4. D. No player has ever won more than one Pro Tour.
5. B. Anything that can target a Shifting Sliver kills it. Even an Ertenon Djinn affecting it forcefully. And Unsummon. Most cannot target a nonblue permanent, which means it will not kill the Ghost. Pyrokinesis, on the other hand, would be banned if a mono source, which also cannot be countered.
6. C. Ush Diadem isn't an actual spell. Scrapyards says it can't be countered, right there on the card. And Sleight of Hand is a mono source, which also cannot be countered.
7. B. Taxidie.
8. D. The Extended format allows it from the Revised Edition and The Dark expansion on, so the Mox and the Memox (from Legends) are out. The Kird Ape would be legal… except that it's been banned. Only Tar Mats makes it.
9. C. Jackalopes is capable of killing a creature with protection from red since it either targets nor occupies damage to it.
10. A. Maledictions makes hand existing cost—both deck included—but don't do it thing for colored mana. Also, they look sticky without expensive annoying mana.
11. C. While a Concealed Land cannot be destroyed, it can still be taxed. Bury and destroy are two different effects, the main difference being that you cannot regenerate from buried. Blow torches aren't tourney legal.
12. A. Arena of Flames randomly checks to see if the creature is black. Since Fervor of Servitude makes the creature a creatures black, the Armor will fall off.
13. C Both of these cards' abilities are called "triggered abilities." The ability is triggered when the card is played and resolves even though the card itself may have been destroyed by counter effect.
14. B. While you can target a Forcebow from Black Cowboy with a black spell while it's in the graveyard, as soon as that cowboy comes into play, the protection will come Arendo Dead is killed and you die other Black Cowboy to be graveyard.
15. B. Changling icons-symbols is a special race, and happens after the results of all the other effects have been calculated. This whole shebang is under Mark Sottley, though, and may change.
16. D. When the 2/2 Raging Ravine blocks the 6/1 ball Lightning, the ball Lightning's damage is doubled to 12. Ten of that damage trample over to your opponent, triggering the Furnace again and doubling it to 20.
17. C. Time Vault has an extra ability that you must remove a "time counter" from the Vault in order to take an extra turn. The only way to put one of these counters on the Time Vault is by skipping a turn and untapping it—but it must be tapped first.
18. B. Trick question. The Alpha Cyclopean Tomb does not have a printed casting cost, but it still has a casting cost of four (more mana Ancient Tomb, on the other hand, is a land, and lands do not have casting costs.
19. B. There's Fighting Drake (also known as Alpine Drake), Time Cobra (aka Kaysonnah) and Rain of Tears (aka Sinkhole), but if you were thinking Mox Diamond acts the same thing as Mox Emerald, think again. Unlike the Emerald, the Diamond comes into play tapped.
20. A. Sol'kan the Cosmic Horror is the Minion of Leshrac (protection does not affect sacrificial) and tap the Minion to destroy the Yawgmoth Demon. Fly two black mana to sorcery the Minion of Tevesh Szat's upkeep and end up a to kill the Fledgling Djinn by giving it +3/+3. Powers the Juzam Djinn's upkeep and take one point of damage.

KILLER DECKS

Kudzu's Revenge

BY GARY WISE

In the early days of Magic, people scrounged up their last pennies to buy one more booster pack in the hope of getting a cool rare like Chaos Orb or Gauntlet of Might. Unfortunately, more often than not you'd end up with something lame like a Farmstead, Chaoslace or gasp Kudzu. However, even the worst card has a use, and can even find its way into a tournament-level deck. This "throwaway" card is the symbolic centerpiece of an inexpensive Extended deck that combines the best attributes of green with the power of land destruction.

This deck works fast to gain control of the board, then keeps it with cards like, well, Kudzu.

Like any speedy green deck should, it usually kicks off with a first-turn Llanowar or Fyndhorn Elf. This sets you up to play one of the deck's eight three-mana land destruction spells—either Thermokarst or Winter's Grasp—on the second turn. If all goes well, you'll be able to add Creeping Mold to your selection on the third turn.

But why stop there? Icy Manipulators work just as well as land destruction if you use them to tap your opponent's lands during his upkeep. Still not enough? That's where the Kudzu comes in. With all those Icy's around, Kudzu can be an effective means of crushing your opponent's lands. Just play it on an obtrusive land, tap it with an Icy, and when he moves the Kudzu to one of your lands, tap your land and give it back to him. With eight elf dudes, you'll be able to afford losing a land or two.

Now, what do you add to a land destruction deck to make it better? Why, more land destruction! Strip Mine is a no-no in Extended, but that's okay...it's been replaced by Tempest's Wasteland. Sure, Wasteland can only target non-basic lands, but this is the Extended format we're talking about, where dual-lands and Mishra's Factories reign. With 21 ways of taking out your opponent's land, you should be able to knock out at least one of the colors your opponent is playing, and often more than that.

The rebellion in the Chia factory was bound to happen sooner or later.

However, good landkill decks aren't only about killing land—there will be times when your opponent is able to cast spells and creatures. You need to be able to control all aspects of the game. In some cases, you'll go up against a deck that utilizes Diamonds or Medallions. Fortunately, the Creeping Molds and Icy's handle these just as well as they deal with lands. (Plus, they make great fodder for your Uktabi Orangutans.) You might have trouble with a big creature if your opponent can get one into play. If such an instance arises, it's usually Icy to the rescue. Otherwise, you may have to take a pounding until you've got enough critters and damage dealers to gang-tackle it.

Weenie creatures, on the other hand, are a breeze. Triskelions are a bit pricey at six mana, but you'll usually have enough mana by the time you need them anyway. 4/4 creatures are always nice, but it's the Triskelion's firing ability that really makes it worthwhile. One Triskelion can pick off a one-, two- or even three-toughness creature. If there aren't any creatures in your way, you can opt for the all-out attack. Attack for four and then shoot three counters at your opponent for a total of seven damage. Just don't make the mistake of firing those counters until they'll win you the game. You'll always have an opportunity to use the counters, so wait until the last possible moment.

Another good damage-dealer is the Cursed Scroll. This is quickly becoming one of the most popular tourney cards. Just hold onto a few extra land, use the Scroll when all you've got is a handful of Forests and you're assured two points of damage. Of course, there's always good old fashion beat-down. Erhnams are among the most cost-efficient creatures in Extended and the ever-annoying Mishra's Factories are always ready to deliver some damage. Even your army of Elves can poke away a few points.

The kicker in this deck is Stunted Growth, a hugely underrated card that can devastate your opponent, ensuring that once you have the advantage, you keep it. Forcing your opponent to put three cards back on top of his library has many ramifications, not the least of which is that your opponent won't draw any land for at least three more turns.

The sideboard is mostly built to augment the effectiveness of this deck against other popular deck archetypes. The Emerald Charms and Tranquilities will help you take out gimmicky decks like Mesacraft and Fruity Pebbles, and the Barbed Foliages and Serrated Biskelion give you more protection against those annoying Knights and Orders. For decks toting a lot of artifacts, be sure to sub in the extra Orangutans.

Kudzu's Revenge gives you an opportunity to play with some older cards you never thought you'd use again while still being competetive in the Extended environment. With no dual lands in the deck, it's significantly cheaper to build than most other Extended tourney decks, and there's nothing quite like seeing the look on your opponent's face when you defeat him with a Kudzu.

Gary Wise is a frequent member of the Pro Tour. If you happen to bump into him, he'd be happy to trade his extra killer Kudzus for your useless dual lands.

FOGLIO PORTFOLIO

When it comes to theme decks, we've covered a broad range of topics over the years—everything from sports to demons to the irreverent bashing of old people. One thing we haven't looked at is artists. So, in our 32nd installment of "Theme Decks," we've decided to honor a prolific Magic artist—and who better than Phil Foglio, winner of the 1997 InQuest Fan Award for best artist (see pg. 88)?

Our man Phil has worked on 42 different Magic cards—unfortunately, most of them suck. (In play value, that is, not artistically.) So, in order to come up with a playable deck, we had to reach into some of Phil's other work. Tempting as it was to include some XXXenophile cards, we managed to limit ourselves to Portal and, of course, our very own "Holiday Magic Cards" (InQuest #33).

Scorpion Clan Coup

BY ZEN FAULKES

Until now, Legend of the Five Rings players knew Scorpion almost exclusively through dishonor decks. But Scorpion Clan Coup is set during the time when Scorpion was at their height, not the defeated clan we've known. This Bayushi Scorpion deck includes the deviousness you'd expect of a clan who acted as Rokugan's secret police, but with the armies of a great clan as well. A few touches of sabotage act like a scorpion's pincers to hold your opponent down while your military power acts as the scorpion's tail, delivering the killing blow.

Scorpion have always been masters of denial, and some staple Scorpion cards appear in this deck. Yogo Asami, with her ability to bow personalities on both your turn and your opponent's, is profoundly annoying in head-to-head games. Ninja Shapeshifters are included mainly to copy her ability, allowing you to lock up personalities so that your few big units can go over and whomp undefended provinces. Of course, if your opponent has nifty personalities that the Shapeshifters can copy...go for it.

Although dishonor isn't the main theme of the deck, Secrets on the Wind is here. It's included to slow down honor gain, and make key personalities vulnerable to Force of Will and Test of Honor. If you're facing a Shadowlands deck (like Junzo-in-a-Can), do not discard Force of Will to the Merchant Caravans. With a 4 focus value it's tempting, but you will in all likelihood need those spells to kill off big, icky oni.

Once you've managed to hang up or eliminate most of your opponent's personalities, you can unleash the armies of Scorpion. The strategy is, "Feint east, strike west." Bayushi Marumo is a key personality in this deck. His gold cost and zero honor-requirement made him nearly useless with the Ruined Scorpion stronghold, but he looks mighty fine to a Bayushi Scorpion player. His ability to move from province to province makes him work a little like cavalry or Traversable Terrain. Marumo's maneuverability lets you pull some tricks that pure cavalry can't, however. For instance, you can lay in Suspended Terrain at one province to bog down your opponent's units even more, then have Marumo leave the battle to avoid destruction.

Yogo Asami's Poison Works and Beauty Salon: It's better to look good than feel good.

Other options for moving units to put your forces where your opponent doesn't expect them include Superior Tactics, Yogo Shidachi and Bayushi Tangen. Shidachi doesn't bow when using his innate ability, which means you can use him to move your units, then cast Light of Amaterasu or Force of Will later.

Mainly because of Marumo's ability (he can only move when he's got a single follower), you want to pack a lot of punch into one follower. Elite Heavy Infantry and Imperial Honor Guard, which would have been almost impossible to use in a Ruined Scorpion deck, are just the ticket. Bushi Dojo and Hub Villages help pay for these pricey armies.

"No! Not the Imperial Sleeper Hold!"

you can often move them there using Shosuro Ikawa's ability. Likewise, you can use Ikawa's nifty ability to flip your holdings into a province with Crossroads attached. Don't forget that Ikawa can also move your opponent's cards out of his favorable regions. Sometimes, you might want to use Ikawa to move fortifications before they're paid for in the Dynasty phase. If your opponent already has Unscalable Walls at one province, sliding a second copy of that fortification over to the same province will usually ensure that it can't come into play.

When you've got so much force backed into a few tight bundles, Light of Amaterasu is a very effective spell. It's a reusable Rallying Cry for one unit. With that spell, or a Rallying Cry, Accessible Terrain can allow you to munch more than one province a turn. Once you've destroyed a province, use Accessible Terrain to move a unit into another battle from your fief.

Despite the number of doors opened up with the introduction of the Bayushi stronghold, some things haven't changed. By now, Scorpion players should be used to being behind in the honor race, and that's still the case. The Imperial Honor Guard and a little Confusion at Court should keep your armies from being thwarted by the Imperial Favor. I haven't included Breach of Etiquette, though, because clans that used to be frozen in their tracks by a single Breach of Etiquette (like Lion and Naga) are no longer so vulnerable to it. There are lots of good events to hurt honor decks, so some of those are used instead.

Big, high-force units (lots of those here) are natural targets for duels. Although your samurai have respectable chi, it's not high enough to avoid getting sliced by a good dueling deck. Luckily, Bayushi Tangen can take the blade for your military leaders. He helps pump up the Ancestral Sword, too.

Because the new Scorpion stronghold means you can peek at your opponent's hand on a whim, I couldn't resist including The Obsidian Mirror. Yes, it's slow to enter play, but it is a fun way to deny your opponent some key fate cards. Even without the Mirror, do not underestimate the stronghold ability to look at your opponent's fate hand. You can go into battle and know whether your opponent has a Superior Tactics ready to destroy your terrain, or whether you will be hit with Block Supply Lines and won't be able to straighten, or whether you risk a Counterattack. Any soldier can tell you that information is ammunition.

Zen Faulkes was the top Crab skirmisher at the Day of Thunder tournament at GenCon '97. That should count for something, shouldn't it?

UP YOUR SLEEVE

THE 38TH HANTEI FALLS

Just having an opponent lose the Imperial Favor makes this card useful, but The 38th Hantei Falls is especially cool because it provides a new way to win. If you have all four Walls of Otosan Uchi out when this event hits, you win. This victory path depends on two factors: getting the Walls in play and having the event show up at the right time.

Getting the four Walls into play is not difficult. Not only do you have Through the Waterworks, you can also use the event Architects of the Wall and the Kaiu Castle region to pull them out of your dynasty deck. Political Distraction can help deal with the honor loss if you plan on pulling out a couple of Walls in a single turn.

Of course, not only do you have to get the fortifications in play, you must keep them in play to win. A single Wall in the discard pile spells the end for that little victory plan. When you need help with fortifications, call a Crab. Shiryo no Kaiu provides much needed insurance by letting you retrieve a discarded fortification. Try attaching the ancestor to Kaiu Suman: he's cheap, has no honor requirement and can move the Walls to your province of choice. For instance, if you attach Walls to a Lost Valley, they'll be safe from Explosives or Alhundro Cornejo. Put the Walls in a Clan Heartland, and they're safe from attacking armies. Shosuro Ikawa will let you move them, too.

Having The 38th Hantei Falls resolve at the right moment is much trickier. Avoid Fate and the Seer promo card are popular ways of stalling events, but there are other ways to help ensure the event appears only when you need it. First, you'll need to know when the event is in your provinces. You can use a Ninja Spy to accomplish that (and you'll probably have them in your deck to play Through the Waterworks), or have cards turned face up outside the Dynasty phase with Essence of Air or Shiryo no Shosuro. You can have one of your cheap shugenja cast Strike at the Roots to put The 38th Hantei Falls at the bottom of your Dynasty deck. Later, once you've retrieved all the Imperial fortifications, use Augury to fetch the event and put it back at the top of your deck, giving you a win at the start of your next turn. ■ Zen Faulkes

FILLING THE SHOES OF THE WORLD'S WORST MAGIC PLAYER

DEAD MAN'S

BY JEFF HANNES

HAND

THIS MONTH:
PRISMATIC PROTECTION

YOU CAN'T WIN.

Win? Who cares about winning? On the verge of yet another humiliating defeat—this time at the hands of Heather "The Hurt" Harris—Eugene T. Dudley, the world's worst Magic player, hasn't even been thinking about victory. He's been thinking about protection—no silly, protection from colors. In fact, his latest losing deck was constructed with only one goal in mind: to give one of his creatures protection from all five colors.

Heather's done her part to make sure Eugene doesn't have a prayer of winning, putting the hurt on him with a Shivan Dragon. Eugene could try and hold off the Dragon for a few more turns, but what's the point? Heather's up over 40 life and Eugene has, well, a Wood Elemental. However, he's pretty sure that he finally has all the cards he needs to execute his plan. The question is "Which creature will it be?"

Can you help Eugene figure out which one of his creatures can gain protection from all five colors this turn and how to do it?

KEEP IN MIND THE FOLLOWING:

- It is the beginning of your main phase. Your life is irrelevant. Your graveyard is irrelevant. You will be assim—er, never mind.
- The Flickering Ward on the Wood Elemental is giving protection from green.
- The Wood Elemental is 1/1. How lame.
- You must give one of Eugene's creatures protection from black, blue, green, red and white. You do not need to give the creature protection from purple.
- A creature with protection from a color cannot be targeted by spells or effects of that color.
- If a creature gains protection from a color, any enchantments of that color on the creature are immediately buried.
- If you're wondering how Eugene got that Ihsan's Shade into play, you're clearly not spending enough time on actually solving the puzzle.

LAST MONTH'S "HAVE A HEART" SOLUTION:

1. During your upkeep, spend two mana to activate the Soldevi Digger, putting the Heart of Bogardan on the bottom of your library.
2. Tap two Islands and activate the Flooded Shoreline to return the Urborg Stalker and the tapped Islands to your hand.
3. Tap two Islands and activate the Flooded Shoreline to return the Ertai's Familiar and the tapped Islands to your hand. Because the Familiar left play, the top three cards of your library go to the graveyard.
4. Spend three mana to cast Corpse Dance, bringing the Tolarian Serpent into play.
5. Pay for the Tolarian Serpent by putting the top seven cards of your library into your graveyard.
6. Process the Black Vise. You now have nine cards in your hand, so you take five damage. Spend two mana and activate the Bone Mask to prevent the damage, removing the top five cards of your library from the game.
7. One card remains in your library, the Heart of Bogardan. Proceed to your draw phase and draw the Heart of Bogardan.
8. Bobby kills you with a Lightning Bolt and takes off with Lulu, his new valentine. Better luck next time, Eugene.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS ON MAGIC: THE GATHERING

STUMPER OF THE MONTH

Q: If my opponent has a Lich in play and I use Steal Enchantment, does my opponent die?
—JUSTIN PFLIGER, NACHES, WA

A: Usually, but not always. A Lich's "you lose" only triggers if it leaves play, not if it changes control. So your opponent will have zero (or less) life but still be in the game. If he can get back above zero life before the end of the phase, he's fine. If he destroys the Lich before then, YOU lose.

This month's winner walks off with three different foreign edition Magic packs and a pack of Legends!

Q: What happens if you Ertai's Meddling your opponent's Ertai's Meddling?
—Jacob Gallay, Babylon, NY

A: Ertai's Meddling is as good as a counterspell for any interrupt. The target spell won't be there when the Meddling'd interrupt finally resolves, so it will fizzle.

Q: What happens when The Wretched is blocked by The Wretched?
—Chue Vang, Sheboygan, WI

A: The attacking player gets both of them. The Wretched only gives control of things blocking it, not things that it blocks.

Q: What will happen if I cast Repentance on a Spirit of the Night or some creature with a protection from its own color?
—Kalayaan Magno, The Philippines

A: It will deal damage to itself, and then the protection will reduce that damage to zero.

Q: If I cast an Earthlink (cost of BRG3) could I gain three life from Wooden Sphere, Throne of Bone and Iron Star?
—Andy Newell, Kokomo, IN

A: All three will trigger. If you pay three mana, you'll get three life. If you had three of the same artifact, instead of three different ones, you could still gain one life from each.

Q: If I have a Forsaken Wastes in play and cast a Drain Life, will my opponent still take damage?
—Eric Kowalsky, Auburn, NY

A: Yes, but you won't gain any life.

HUH?

What happens if you leech your buddy's Lich?

Q: My opponent casts Aspect of Wolf on one of his creatures, and I cast a Deflection to change the target to my creature. What does my creature get?
—Alex Braitberg, St. Louis, MO

A: Your opponent still controls the Aspect of Wolf, so it counts his Forests (and not yours) no matter whose creature on which it is located.

Q: Can you use the last counter of a Gemstone Mine and then sacrifice it to Army Ants? Or sacrifice it then, as a mana source, tap it for mana?
—Paul Sible, West Virginia

A: No to both. When you remove the last counter, the Gemstone Mine is destroyed as a triggered effect. You can use mana sources (like Squandered Resources) before it destroys itself but not regular abilities like Army Ants. And when you sacrifice something, you place it directly into the graveyard; there's no time to slip in a mana source.

Q: What type of mana does a land produce when you have a Ritual of Subdual and a Hall of Gemstone in play?
—Evan Barkhouse, Nova Scotia, Canada

A: During the untap phase and the first part of the upkeep, all the lands produce colorless. Once you resolve the Hall of Gemstone's upkeep effect (regardless of the order they were cast), the lands produce the chosen color until end of turn.

Q: I have an Æther Flash in play and my opponent casts Nature's Revolt. Do all the lands go to the graveyard?
—Sheila Hoag, Carleton, MI

A: No. The land-creatures are already in play; Æther Flash only triggers when a creature comes into play. It won't kill new lands either; since they don't become creatures until they're in play, Æther Flash misses its chance to trigger.

Q: When a creature with a Licid on it attacks and becomes tapped, does the Licid become tapped as well?
—Peter Meijer, The Netherlands

A: No. Usually people tap the creature and any enchantments on it together because it's more convenient and makes no difference for normal enchantments. But technically, the enchantment doesn't tap. In the case of Licids, you need to be careful to tap just the creature, since it does make a difference.

HUH?

Does phasing save you from the queen of the grave?

Q: Can I phase out the creature animated by Coffin Queen, untap her and get another?
—Brian Braun, Derlap, KS

A: Yes. When a creature phases out, its link to the Coffin Queen is broken. When it returns you still control it, and it won't be removed from the game if you untap or lose control of the Coffin Queen.

Q: If I use Thran Forge to turn my opponent's Shivan into an artifact creature and then use Aladdin to gain control of it, would I control it long enough to attack with it?
—Christopher Iglehart, Vail, CO

A: Yes. You keep control as long as Aladdin is in play, even after the Shivan stops being an artifact.

Q: If my opponent has creatures on his Cold Storage or Safe Haven and I gain control of it and sacrifice it, do I gain control of those creatures?
—Josh Kuchta, Fairborn, OH

A: Whoever owns each creature card from Cold Storage or Safe Haven gets control of that creature, no matter who activated the Storage/Haven.

Q: With a Bösium Strip in play, can I counter my opponent's Fireball by using an Arcane Denial which is on top of my graveyard?
—Matthew Snead, Adrian, MI

A: Only if you already activated the Bösium Strip earlier in the turn. Activating it is an instant, which can't be done in the interrupt window.

Q: I cast Blood Frenzy on a creature. Before the end of the turn, I cast Flickering Ward and choose red. What happens?
—Kyle Golf, Sacramento, CA

A: The creature still has +4/+0 and still gets destroyed at end of turn. The Blood Frenzy spell targeted the creature, but once it's resolved, the effect is attached to that creature and isn't targeted.

Q: I use a Helm of Possession to take control of one of my opponent's creatures. Next turn, can I sacrifice that same creature to take control of another one of his creatures?
—Adam Zorza, Novi, MI

A: Not quite. You can't use the Helm again without untapping it, and if you untap it, you lose control of the creature. You need two Helms to pull off this trick.

Q: I cast two creatures, a Goblin Hero and a Mogg Fanatic, and my Enraging Licid hops onto the Goblin Hero. I attack. I then cast Relentless Assault, transform my Licid, and have it hop onto the Mogg Fanatic. Can the Goblin Hero participate in my second attack or is it sick?
—Sean Costales, Redlands, CA

A: We'll assume you used a Twiddle or something to untap the Licid in between—otherwise, it can't hop onto the Mogg Fanatic. Yes, the Goblin Hero is sick. Enraging Licid doesn't remove summoning sickness; it just makes the creature unaffected by the sickness as long as the Licid is attached.

HUH?

When playing Portal, do you stand by the rules or the cards?

Q: My friend and I were playing Magic when I drew Defiant Stand, a Portal card. The card reads "Play Defiant Stand only after you're attacked, before you declare interceptors." There is only one problem...it's a sorcery! You can't play a sorcery on someone else's turn. How could Wizards of the Coast miss such a mistake?
—Joseph Phillips, West Palm Beach, FL

A: The prime rule of Magic is that if a card's text contradicts the rulebook, the card wins. Portal has quite a few sorcery spells which are played on the opponent's turn since the set has no instants.

BABYLON 5™ Collectible Card Game

Q: I had a character with Diplomacy 5 and Intrigue 3 in an Intrigue conflict. He had already rotated to declare that he would support in the resolution phase. I knew I was going to lose by 2, so I played Level the Playing Field on him so he could apply his Diplomacy instead. Is that legal?

A: No. Timing in B5 is almost always "X happens then Y happens." By playing this card, you cannot retroactively alter how you decided to participate in the conflict.

Q: It is not completely clear whether the tension tokens are linked—i.e., are the Narn-Centauri and Centauri-Narn tensions independent settings?

A: The description of the status tracker in the rulebook says it tracks "the relative tension of each race toward the others." Narn hostility toward the Centauri may not necessarily be the same as Centauri hostility toward the Narn. The values start off reciprocal but can become different as the game progresses.

Q: If a conflict says target a supporting character and that character gets promoted to the inner circle during the action round, is it still a valid target for the original conflict?

A: Yes.

Q: With the card Border Raid, if you initiate that conflict, can you attack with more than one fleet? The card only says that you have to support with only one fleet, but it says nothing about attacking your opponent.

A: The only thing you can do with your fleets is what is permitted by the card. So, the initiator can support (only) with one fleet (only) and the defender can attack or oppose (only) with one fleet (only).

Q: Is there a hand-size limit?

A: Nope. (And, apparently, no reason to take advantage of the end-of-turn discard—IQ)

HOUSE RULES

THE BEST IN GAME VARIANTS:

STAR WARS CUSTOMIZABLE CARD GAME™

Clone Wars

By Paul Hegyi

"As the battle ends, Darth Vader and Luke Skywalker stand side-by-side, deactivating their lightsabers. They stand over their fallen enemies, the Mandalorian Warriors Han Solo and Boba Fett."

What?!! Luke Skywalker and Darth Vader fighting together? Han Solo partners with Boba Fett? It's just another day in the Clone Wars, a Star Wars CCG variant that allows you to incorporate cards from both sides of the force into one deck.

™ & © 1997 Lucasfilm. Courtesy of Fine Scenarios.

OBJECT: As in a normal game of Star Wars, the object is to run your opponent out of force.

SETUP: The major setup difference in this variant is deck construction. You may freely combine cards from both the Dark side and the Light side with the following restrictions:

- Your deck still must contain 60 cards.
- You may only have as many of a card in your deck as its on-table restriction. If a card has no restriction, you may include as many copies as you wish.
- You may include multiple incarnations of the same character, such as Luke Skywalker, Commander Skywalker and Son of Skywalker.
- If possible, use card sleeves to help differentiate your cards from your opponent's.

RULES CHANGES: Here are the major things to keep in mind regarding the rules:

- Even though Dark and Light are now interchangable, cards which would only work on a Rebel or an Imperial still function as such.
- Since neither player is the Dark side, determine who goes first randomly.

DOUBLE TROUBLE

In this Star Wars CCG variant, you can enact battles from the Clone Wars. Instead of being restricted to cards of one side, you may now include any SWCCG card in your deck. Now's your chance to use that Mandalorian Armor on Han Solo or have Darth Vader train Leia to be his apprentice.

The majority of the changes in this format are ways of dealing with specific cards (no, you can't Epic Duel against your own Luke). Also, there are some minor deck construction and setup changes that facilitate and balance the environment—yes, they are clones, but allowing 10 Vaders, 10 Lukes and 10 Obi-Wans would be bad.

You may include any SWCCG card in your deck to a total of 60 cards. Individually, you may only have as many of a specific card as it's on-table restriction. For example, Luke Skywalker has one unique •, so you can only include one copy in your deck. However, you could also include one Son of Skywalker and one Commander Skywalker, and you could even have all three in play at the same time.

On the other hand, Sense has no restriction, so you may have as many as you'd like. Remember, all locations have a single •, so you may only have one of each. Card restrictions are local to your side of the table, so each player may have a copy of a unique character on their side (allowing two Yodas and two Executors in play at once). Out of play is modified so that your opponent can still have a copy of a character if your copy is out of play.

The facing of a location is important, and no longer clear since you do not represent a specific side of the Force. Now, when you play a location, you see which side of the force the card is (from the back of the card) and face that side towards you. This can also be seen by the uniqueness dot (which is red on the side that should face you) or the picture, which should be upright.

This variant allows you to take advantage of some of the combo cards in a unique way, but must also restrict those that go too far. As a rule, battle interrupts such as Gift Of The Mentor or Dark Collaboration will work regardless of the side the required participants are on. So, if you have Luke battling against Obi-Wan, you may play Gift Of The Mentor to add 2 battle destiny. The same follows for the "opposing" destiny adders, such as I Have You Now and The Force Is Strong With This One. You can have both targets on the same side, easily setting up a combo with both your Luke Skywalker and your ability > 2 Imperial to play The Force Is Strong With This One.

Epic Events are a special case that must be treated individually. With Attack Run, your opponent only loses force if he deployed the Death Star. Your opponent only loses force from Commence Primary Ignition if he deployed at least half of the blown-away Rebel Base locations (so you can't just toss out Yavin to blow it away). If you successfully Target The Main Generators, damage is only dealt if your opponent deployed the Hoth: Main Generators (he takes the damage). Epic Duels can only be played against your opponent's target, though you may do it in reverse (using Run Luke, Run to initiate a duel with your Luke against your opponent's Vader). If you cross your opponent's character, it is considered out of play for him but you may keep a copy of the character if it is already on table (or deploy one after the cloned copy is lost).

Deploy restrictions resulting from the Hoth: Main Generators work for the player that deployed the site (his opponent can only deploy to the outermost exterior marker). On the other hand, the Dagobah deploy restriction still affects all players.

As a general rule, cards that specify an opposing side of the force look to or target your opponent (a Light Side card that refers to the Dark Side now uses your opponent). Cards that refer to a specific color of icon act on the icons on the side of the table they would normally effect. In the case of Djas Puhr (a Dark Side card using Dark Side icons), his power is determined by the icons on your side of the table. With cards like Probe Droids and Wyron Serper, look at your opponent's side of the table to determine their use. Let's not get into Brainiac....

Although these rules take into account many card changes to help make Clone Wars fun and different, don't wholly change all the cards. You still need to respect the difference between Rebels and Imperials and realize that they are not interchangeable. If a card thematically works only on Rebels (such as Scanning Crew), you cannot use it against Imperials. That Imperial Scanning Crew from "Star Wars" was looking for hidden Rebels, not their own people.

That should be enough to get you going on your own cloning spree. If any quetions pop up that aren't covered here, use your best "Star Wars" judgment. Failing that, there's always rock, paper, scissors. Now, get those Spaarti Cloning Cylinders up and running so you can crank out that unbeatable force!

Paul Hegyi, West Coast squadron leader and full-time Star Wars player, hopes to one day earn a job at Decipher cleaning out the chamber pots.

CLONE BRIGADES

Clone Wars allows you to try plenty of new strategies by mixing cards from both sides. Here are a couple of exciting deck ideas you might want to try:

- Mains-and-Toys has a new twist now. Ever been unable to play The Force Is Strong With This One because your opponent doesn't have a high destiny Imperial? Now, you can play that Imperial or Vader himself! With Back cards, Tunnel Vision and Unexpected Interruption, you should be able to pull off the combos without three Vaders in your deck.
- The ultimate in space superiority. We all know that the Rebels have the best snub fighters, effectively combining cheap cost, hyperspeed and good power. The Imperials make the best intimidating ships, from the cheap Victory-Class Star Destroyers to the unbeatable Executor. Now, you can combine all the best star ships in a deck with the best force drain sites (Light Side Kessel, Dark Side Kiffex and Kashyyyk). With Haven, you'll be able to get them all out cheap and spread fear across the galaxy with your unbeatable force.
- Speed Dark Deal. Remember the strategies that developed with Echo Base Operations? Now, you can put them to use to bring about Dark Deal. Start with Bespin: Cloud City, run all the Cloud City sites, and include assorted droids and How Did We Get Into This Mess? to cycle through and quickly control the three sites and the sector. With the +4 bonus from Dark Deal, you shouldn't have any trouble keeping it out long enough to drain your opponent with the +2.

INSPIRATION & ADVICE FOR GAMEMASTERS

The use of a well-crafted deathtrap can get the action rolling.

BY ALLEN VARNEY

One Last Desperate Chance

"At last I have you in my grasp, Captain Courageous! When this candle burns through that oh-so-thin length of twine, the 16-ton-weight hanging over your heroic head will turn you into heroic cream cheese!"

Deathtraps. The nefarious villain traps our hero in an inescapable contraption, from which our hero ingeniously escapes at the last possible instant! Deathtraps ornament sci-fi and fantasy pulp fiction, superhero comics, action movies and, some might say, the Clinton administration. But in roleplaying, we see them less often. Why?

THE DANGER OF CREATING DANGER

Because, though deathtraps can enhance any kind of adventure, you can find trouble just getting your player characters into your trap. Your villain either has to pound them all into oblivion, or you must shanghai them with knockout gas or other plot devices. And players irrationally hate that.

Always make your deathtrap a backup option, a side event in your larger story. Try to get the heroes into the trap, but if they cleverly bypass it, more power to them. If they fall in, they should blame themselves, blame the villain, anyone but you. A couple of standard trap-springing techniques encourage this: trickery (the villain has covered his headquarters with an invisible sedative) and coercion ("Jump into the pit, hero, or Grandma Jones is toast!").

An even greater risk: Deathtraps can kill your PCs. Unlike fictional heroes, players have no writer ingeniously engineering their escape. If they don't twig to the solution, you have to spring the PCs through lame NPC intervention or, worse, leave them to a gory and dramatically inappropriate death.

Here, though, you have storytelling tools to preserve their lives. Engineer the NPC's intervention to give the story a nice twist—say, by having the villain's repentant henchman release the heroes. Also, consider making the trap non-fatal: The villain doesn't want to kill the heroes, just delay them, humiliate them or learn about their powers. If the PCs can't get out in time, the revelation ("Hey, we're not dead!") should prove a surprise.

Maybe you sneer at a harmless deathtrap. In that case, make sure to drop hints for at least one escape from the trap, either before you spring it or as it works.

"NOW I'VE GOT YOU!"

The essence of the deathtrap is delay. Heroes enter room, fall into bottomless pit, the end: not a deathtrap. Heroes stand on narrow ledge above bottomless pit, ledge slowly pulls into wall beneath their feet: a fine deathtrap—because the victims have time to dread their fate and conceive a daring escape plan.

Why would a villain put his enemies in this trap instead of killing them?

- Ego: The bad guy wants the satisfaction of seeing the heroes squirm and of demonstrating his intelligence. You may well observe that, if he had the brains of a mashed potato, he'd know better. But the villain doesn't realize he's merely a character in the hero's story. The villain thinks he's the star, and his deathtrap demonstrates his style.
- Schedule: A tight timetable forces the villain to stow the captured hero in some handy mud pit. "When the tide comes in, he'll drown.. or at least he'll be too busy to stop us. Now, follow me. We've only got 14 minutes to blow up the White House." This suits the brainy schemer who has a few more IQ points than the standard egomaniac.
- Intelligence: The most cunning evildoers, far from underestimating the heroes, want to learn why these guys keep winning. By putting them in a seemingly foolproof trap and watching closely, the villain learns more about his enemies, possibly even a damaging secret.

As you narrate the circumstances of the deathtrap, keep these points in mind:

- Uh-oh good, chuckles bad: The deathtrap should worry your players; skip the puns and broad humor.
- Give them time: The heroes may have scant seconds to break free before the sawmill blade halves them, but offer the players a reasonable chance to think through things. Describe everything their PCs can observe.

Make the heroes sweat and the players will get the point.

The most cunning evildoers, far from underestimating the heroes, want to learn why these guys keep winning.

- Make them sweat: The villain wants to scare the heroes, and so do you. Keep the heroes conscious. If your game has ways to let them converse weakly but not act, use them; otherwise, institute your own "grogginess" rule on the spot.
- Multiple escape methods: Have a few possible escapes in mind for each trap ahead of time. Tailor them to your PCs' abilities. Are some heroes smart, others strong, still others perceptive? Give them each a way out, so that at least one will find it. Don't be surprised when they devise a solution you never expected!

BLUEPRINTS

Walls close in, water rises in tiny windowless rooms, tigers clamber up the slope, huge weights hang by threads.... You can recast these clichés with fresh angles ("This huge weight is actually the enlarged body of your baby daughter!"). But why re-cast when you can create something new? Check out these sample deathtraps, ready-made for a variety of genres:

Harmonic convergence: Trapped in a wind tunnel—either modern or magical—the characters notice a low hum under the villain's gloating. He makes his glib farewell, drowned out by the increasing hum. As the sound vibrates in their chest and sinus cavities, the heroes realize the sound will shake them to pieces. Strong heroes can smash through the vibration-weakened wall. Clever PCs can pinpoint the sound's source and destroy it. Gadgeteer superheroes could build a counter-vibrational device that cancels out the sound waves in their vicinity. And anyone can find the hidden ventilation baffles, lined with sound-absorbent air filters.

Salt boat: The villain is escaping onto the open sea in his luxurious ship. In pursuit, the heroes spy a vessel nearby and set out after him. Far out on the ocean, the hull begins to dissolve; it's made of salt laced with shark attractant. Can the heroes jury-rig a raft using the boat's few actual timbers?

Vacuum cleaner: The villain drains the air from a room either technologically or magically. The suffocating good guys must empty that nearby fishtank to improvise a diving bell, or smash through a wall, or block the air-removal vents, or....

Running the gauntlet: Sadistic villains link together several deathtraps. The heroes get out of the airless room but fall into the wind tunnel. Smashing through the wall, they enter an air duct that grows scorchingly hot. Leaving the duct, they must swing across an acid vat. Every step of the way, the villain watches and taunts.

DEATHTRAPS IN CONTEXT

Don't forget the reasons why you're constructing all these pits, volcanoes and giant pinball machines: You want suspense and a good scare but, you also want your PCs to shine. They show off by arguing with each other in the midst of deadly peril, by nobly endangering themselves to rescue their fellow victims and by using their unique abilities to foil the villain's plan. Secondly, your deathtrap gives the players a strong anti-villain grudge that can incite many interesting plot developments.

Your trap is a stage set, dramatically engineered for the characters to exert their skills and develop personal animosity toward their foe. These virtues make the deathtrap an important accessory in your gamemastering toolbox. Reach for it! It's almost within reach—with a superhuman effort you can just touch it—one last, desperate chance....

SIMPLE STRATEGIES and DECK DESIGNS

FIRST CONTACT CUSTOMIZABLE CARD GAME

PUBLISHER: Decipher
GENRE: Science Fiction
RELEASE: December 1997
PACKAGING: 9-card booster packs
SUGGESTED RETAIL: $2.50 per booster
SET SIZE: 130 cards

The First Contact expansion set introduces many new game features to the Star Trek Customizable Card Game. The Borg affiliation, new gameplay mechanisms and no upper limit on draw deck sizes have created new strategies and changed how players interact with one another. The 130-card set contains revised personnel battle rules, new card types and several innovative twists that are sure to please old and new players.

Many players will find the temptation to try the Borg impossible to resist. Others will want to explore the gameplay enhancements offered. New cards offer strategic benefits to all the affiliations, and many existing cards are now valuable due to rules changes. While the basic goals of the game are the same, more battles and the ever-present threat of assimilation make the spaceline a more dangerous place.

ASSIMILATE THIS

With the introduction of the Borg, the first new fully-developed affiliation since the game's release in 1994, players now have the ability to emulate the intergalactic bad guys from the Delta Quadrant. However, the Borg are a little different from other affiliations. They are very focused on their objectives and they have certain parameters within which to execute their plan. But don't worry; with their powerful ships and skill-sharing abilities, they have more than enough up their cybernetic sleeves to give any opponent a worthy fight.

The Borg don't attempt missions like other affiliations. Instead, the Borg use objective cards as their primary point-scoring method. They assimilate planets, ships—even other personnel—in an effort to win. Opponents must be wary, because although Borg cannot attack without an objective allowing them to do so, they can change their plans quickly and can counter-attack at will. They also have the ability to beam through opponents' shields, and with Defense drones that add strength to all Borg in the same hive, you don't want to be caught by surprise.

Star Trek: First Contact™ & © Paramount Pictures, Inc. Authorized use.

Players who prefer the Federation, Romulan and Klingon affiliations will be making use of many new cards and gameplay innovations to make life more difficult for their opponents. Some new strategies will limit the effectiveness of counter-cards, like Kevin Uxbridge and Amanda Rogers, opening the way for more complex game plans. In any event, the First Contact expansion will give all players a host of different deck-building ideas.

PLAYING STRATEGIES

Players now have the option of choosing one of four affiliations or any combo of Federation, Klingon and Romulan to build their deck. Borg players will want to take advantage of some of the new rules of First Contact to construct a winning strategy. Most of the Borg personnel are universal, and though they are not terribly menacing by themselves, in multiples they can be a dominating force. The Borg player will want to have a good supply of drones to scout dilemmas, battle opponents and command his fleet. Pay special attention to the combinations of skills and subcommand icons when selecting your drones. Too few of one kind could be deadly.

The Borg objective cards allow your collective to initiate battle, assimilate planets and carry out operations in space. As a Borg player, you may want to employ a multi-faceted strategy to counter your opponent. You may want to have a very focused deck, with the objective of eliminating your opponent's forces or assimilating planet after planet. The good Borg player will strike a competitive balance between offensive strategies and a methodical assimilation of the spaceline.

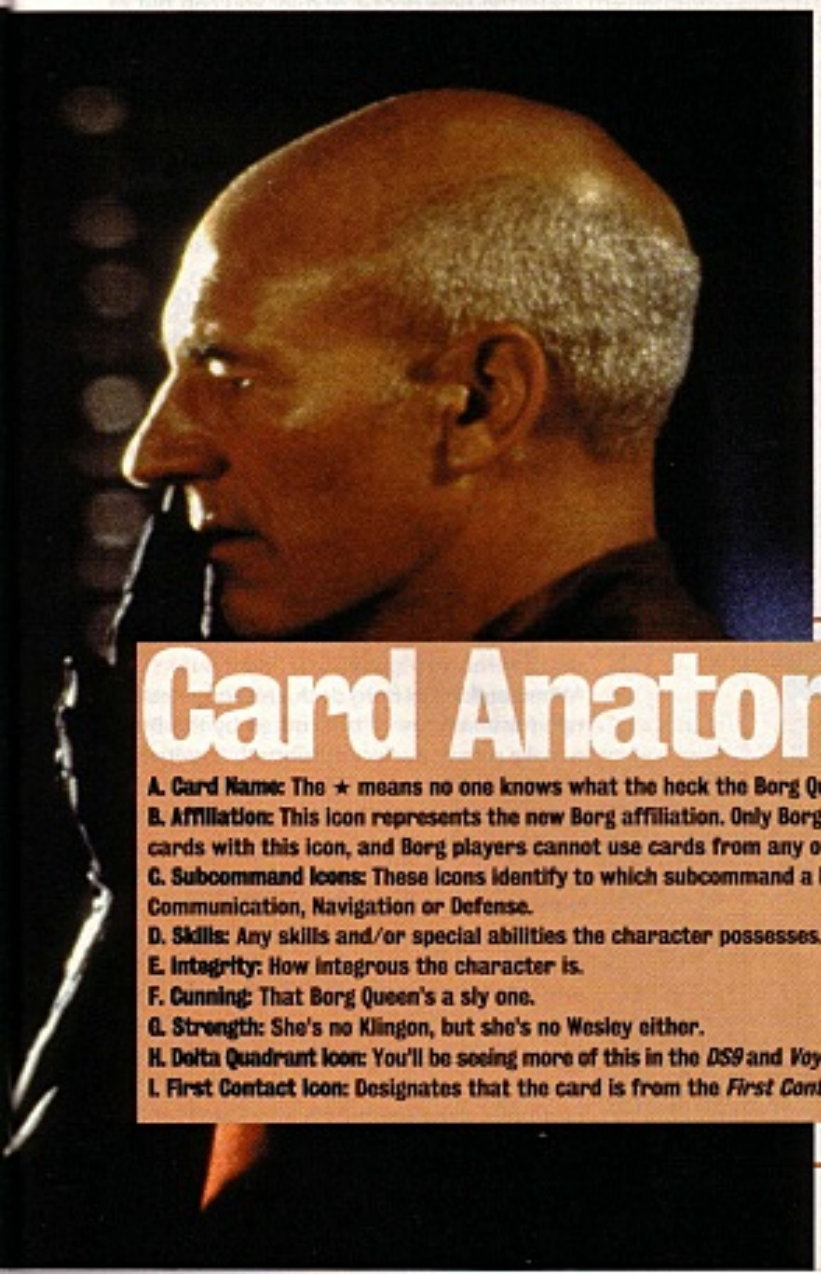

The long lost sixth Spice Girl, Borg Spice.

Players building decks around the three traditional affiliations will have to re-think past deck-building strategy. Cards such as The Line Must Be Drawn Here, Balancing Act and Intermix Ratio mean some gimmick decks that were successful in the past will be more difficult to execute. Now, players will have to focus more on the composition of their Away Teams and their ability to defend against personnel attacks. Dilemmas such as Lack of Preparation, Undetected Beam-In and Scout Encounter can be devastating to the unprepared. Hidden Agenda cards like Mission Debriefing and Prepare Assault Teams will keep both players guessing.

Other cards allow more thematic gameplay. Inserting seldom-used personnel into your deck to take advantage of their new mission specialist status can be advantageous, especially if you've got Assign Mission Specialists to give you the extra points. The downloading mechanism and the unrestricted upper limit on your draw deck allow for great flexibility in deck construction.

DECK BUILDING

The Borg affiliation is methodical and persistent. They start slowly, adding drone after drone until they gain momentum. Once they get going, they can create an impressive force. Knowing how to maximize the Borg reporting mechanisms can be essential to a successful deck.

Card Anatomy

A. Card Name: The ★ means no one knows what the heck the Borg Queen is.
B. Affiliation: This icon represents the new Borg affiliation. Only Borg players can use cards with this icon, and Borg players cannot use cards from any other affiliation.
C. Subcommand Icons: These icons identify to which subcommand a Borg is assigned: Communication, Navigation or Defense.
D. Skills: Any skills and/or special abilities the character possesses.
E. Integrity: How integrous the character is.
F. Cunning: That Borg Queen's a sly one.
G. Strength: She's no Klingon, but she's no Wesley either.
H. Delta Quadrant Icon: You'll be seeing more of this in the DS9 and Voyager expansions.
I. First Contact Icon: Designates that the card is from the First Contact expansion.

Basic training

KNOW YOUR OBJECTIVES. The Borg work best when they have a clear purpose. If your goal is to assimilate planets and complete objectives at space locations, don't worry about getting several massive Borg Cubes into play. The scout ships will do fine. If, however, you want to engage your opponent in ship battles, you need to build your deck to quickly report as many drones as you can; those cubes require a lot of drones to staff them. As a rule, you will want more Borg personnel in your deck than if you were playing another affiliation. Don't worry. There are several ways to get your Borg into play other than the traditional reporting to an outpost.

If you decide to build a Borg battle deck, start with your objectives. Since you can't initiate battle without the proper objective, make sure you stock plenty of the ones you'll need. Eliminate Starship is the foundation of a good attack deck. This allows you to target and battle an opponent's ships, but you don't score points for merely destroying them so stock a good supply of Salvage Starship objectives. You can get 30 points each after you blow up a ship; however, Salvage Starship only works at unique space missions, not planets. If you plan on doing a lot of battling and want to concentrate on space locations, also stock some Establish Gateway objectives. Not only can you earn points with them, but they allow you to download Transwarp Network Gateway cards, valuable assets for Borg spaceline movement.

You will also want to include some Assimilate Counterpart objectives, which allow you to battle an opponent's crew or Away Team. And if you're going to get a counterpart, you should put in at least one Assimilate Homeworld objective. It's 40 points and hurts your opponent if you have the proper missions on the table. The key to getting all this to work is building an efficient deck.

"You're sure this'll get rid of my acne?"

DECK RANDOMIZATION IS IRRELEVANT. The Borg need lots of drones—no problem. With the new deck-size rule, you can put as many drones in your deck as you like, as long as you have a minimum of 30 cards in your draw deck. While you should always use good judgment in building your deck, too many cards can dilute your deck strength; the Borg have more ways of getting out personnel than any other affiliation. Cards such as Undetected Beam-In, Scout Encounter and Retask allow you to download drones into play without using a card draw. Other cards, like Activate Subcommands and Awaken, can also get drones into play more quickly. In addition, the Borg Scout Vessel can "report with crew," and when you have a Borg Cube in play, you can report personnel directly to the cube. Proper utilization of these cards should make getting your Borg into play easy and efficient.

A LITTLE Q ON THE SIDE. The Borg, as with any affiliation, will want to make good use of a Q's Tent side deck. With the downloading function, you can have important cards ready to download without taking up deck space or having to play a Q's Tent from your hand. It's possible to have a Q's Tent side deck and depend on downloading to get out all the cards. This is also a good place to store contingency cards you may need.

ADD OTHER AFFILIATIONS' DISTINCTIVENESS TO YOUR OWN. When building a Borg deck, mission selection is critical. Certain missions cannot be scouted by the Borg, so you want to make sure you select missions that work well with your strategy. Since your opponent may also attempt the missions you put into play if he has the proper personnel or Espionage cards, you also want to be careful not to give your opponent the opportunity. Missions like Tarchannen Study, which require more obscure cards or skills to complete, are solid choices. If you plan on assimilating planets as a strategy, include a few homeworlds in your selection.

BECOMING ONE WITH THE BORG. Some of the new Hidden Agenda cards can create opportunities for your Borg to attack and assimilate if you plan carefully. One thing to remember though: Borg cannot score bonus points unless a Borg card specifically allows it; no easy five points with a Particle Fountain if you're playing the Borg. Other important

Playing Field

A. Spaceline: The missions, which players must accomplish or assimilate.
B. Transwarp Doorway: The Borg use these to hop to and from the Delta quadrant.
C. Starship: Traveling through space ain't like dusting crops, boy.
D. Outpost: Where you bring characters and ships into play.
E. Personnel: To boldly go where no Borg has gone before.
F. Events/Objectives: Event cards you've put into play or your current objective.
G. Hidden Objectives: Objectives which you haven't gotten to yet.
H. Draw Deck: Where you get your cards.
I. Discard Pile: Where your cards go after you use them.
J. Q's Tent Sidedeck: An extra stash of cards you put together at the beginning of the game.

cards for the Borg player to stock are the "Adapt" interrupts, Transwarp Network Gateways and the Regenerate card. Even though the Borg are strong, they are not infallible. Borg efficiency equals Borg success. Here are some helpful hints when creating a Borg deck:

- Use lots of drones and try to get a wide variety of special skills. Even if you don't have a chance to use a particular skill, you can also use that drone for staffing or scouting.
- Have a good supply of Transwarp Network Gateways. Several cards can force you back to your outpost, and you will probably need the gateways to get back on the spaceline quickly.
- Always have drones and adaptation cards available for downloading.
- Make sure to put a Borg Queen and/or Locutus in a Q's Tent to increase your chances to get one in play.
- Have a specific strategy in mind and stick with it. Blowing up ships can be great fun, but if you built a deck to assimilate planets quickly, straying from the gameplan can slow you considerably.
- Use—but don't overuse—A Change of Plans.
- Don't reveal your objective too quickly. Let your opponent sweat for awhile.
- Stock several copies of the objectives you want to use. You're stopped cold without them.

RESISTANCE DOESN'T HAVE TO BE FUTILE

Although the Borg are a formidable opponent, running into a strong Borg deck does not mean you're going to lose the game. In order to win, you have to overpower their small ships and outmaneuver the larger ones. This means flexibility in your deck. You may have to attempt different missions than those you first planned because your first choices may be assimilated and unavailable. Keep a good distance from your Borg opponent; one Transwarp Network Gateway and you could be looking at the business end of a fully-functional Borg Cube.

And since every deck you face will not be Borg, you can't just build an anti-Borg deck or the other affiliations will wipe you out. The Klingons will be battle happy, the Romulans have some sneaky tricks of their own and the Federation has a few new toys as well. The key to success will be how well your deck can withstand the tests of the many new challenges First Contact has brought the Star Trek CCG universe.

Tim Ellington is Decipher drone Seventeen of Twelve. Math is irrelevant.

The Deck

A BORG IN THE HAND...

This deck is a basic Borg attack deck with 30 seed cards designed to defend against a broad range of decks and a draw deck built to attack any opponent. It has a number of offensive cards, allowing your Borg to attack enemy ships and personnel.

The strategy behind this deck is to get your opponent to hit one of the Borg Ship dilemmas so you can play Retask, as well as reporting as many drones as possible to staff the Borg Cube you reported to your Borg Outpost. Clever use of the Scout Encounter and Undetected Beam-In dilemmas will get you some Borg Scout Ships on the spaceline to build some Transwarp Network Gateways.

Height: 12 stories
Weight: 100 tons
Reach (with guns): 300'
Upcoming Events: Galactic War against the Draconis Combine

VS.

GODZILLA

Game: ??
Height: 40 stories (-2" in heels)
Weight: One gazillion and one tons
Reach: 15 stories
Upcoming Events: Battle of the Summer Box Office

Will the Dino from Down Under finally meet his match in a BattleTech mech? Or is this merely destined to be a rematch of the epic Godzilla/Mechagodzilla bout of 1974? Can one man in a glorified tin can accomplish what more than a dozen movies could not—kill off 'Zilla before he gets his own star on the Walk of Fame?

Round One: Uh-oh. The mech contends that Godzilla is not actually a game monster. This could spell doom for 'Zilla. While the judges are debating, the big green guy pulls out a copy of Macho Women with Guns. Obscure, yes, but Godzilla has stats in the game, and thus, is a legal game monster.

Round Two: The mech's challenge really pisses off 'Zilla. He whips out his Swiss army knife. Could it be? Yes! He's going for the can opener!

Round Three: The mech takes off. Bye-bye downtown Tokyo.

Round Four: Godzilla opens up the mech like a can of beans. The atomic lizard slurps the mech jock down as if she was an overcooked ramen noodle.

Winner: Godz—

Round Five: Wait! 'Zilla looks a little greener than usual around the gills... EVERYBODY CLEAR THE AREA, HE'S GOING DOWN!

Round Six: The judges busily consult a veterinarian for a ruling.

Round Seven: Godzilla's tail moves...and out pops the mech jock, shaking off digestive juices and waving to the fans. Guess Godzilla can't handle his sushi.

Winner: Mech

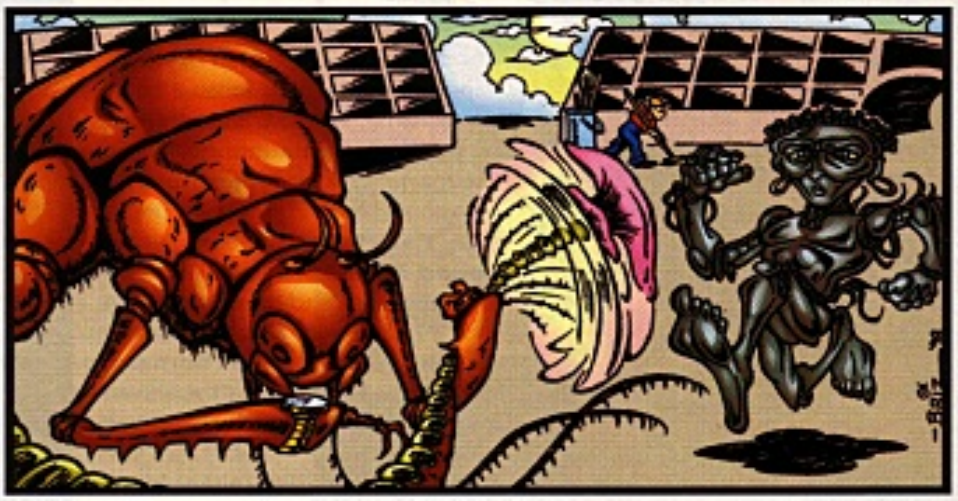

RUST MONSTER

Game: AD&D
Length: 5' from tip to tail, about 3' high
Weight: 120 lbs.
Reach: 24"
Favorite Snack: Your character's favorite platemail suit

VS.

STEEL GOLEM

Game: Magic: The Gathering
Height: 1'
Weight: 1,500 lbs.
Reach: 42"
Favorite Snack: Fudge ripple topped with iron filings

A being of living metal. A giant armadillo with a propeller on its tail. This oughta be good.

Pre-Game: The Steel Golem strides confidently toward the ring, certain of victory. See, SG here prevents creatures from coming into play after he does. All he has to do is arrive first, and Rusty won't even be able to enter the arena. The Rust Monster, having spent the night in the ring, wakes up in time to see the Golem loping toward the ring. "Crap," says the Golem. The Rust Monster says nothing, twirling his tail in the breeze.

Round One: The Golem raises a mighty fist and brings it down upon the rust monster, splattering innards hither and yon and all over most of the front row. Luckily, Rusty's got more innards and flicks its tail, tapping the ankle of the enormous golem.

Round Two: Rusty leaks fluid, but the Golem crumbles to powder.

Winner: Rust Monster

WORF, SON OF MOGH

Game: Star Trek CCG
Height: 6'5"
Weight: 225 lbs.
Reach: 38"
Signature Weapon: The bat'leth, Klingon crescent of death

VS.

XENA, WARRIOR PRINCESS

Game: Hercules & Xena
Height: 5'10"
Weight: 150 lbs.
Reach: 37"
Signature Weapon: The chakram, Ring-Toss of doom

The battle of the licensed properties is a heated one. Both contenders are living legends to their peoples, masters of the martial arts, and have a powerful set of lungs for all that screaming they do. Of course, Worf pals around with Cardassians and Ferengi while Xena tends to associate with nubile gymnasts in various states of undress. We know which side we're rooting for.

Round One: Worf swings his bat'leth into position for an overhead slice. Xena blocks with her short sword and gives him a high-kick to the chest.

Round Two: Xena does a sextuple backflip, landing on her feet. "Have you been trained in zero-g?" growls Worf. "No, I've just got a high center of gravity," answers Xena.

Round Three: Worf stares at Xena's "high center of gravity" long enough for her to hurl her chakram at him. It zips through the air, bounces off several support struts and heads for the Klingon's neck. Worf casually disintegrates it with his phaser.

Round Four: Xena pitches her head back and lets loose with the Amazon battle yodel. Worf clutches his ears in pain. "Sweet mother of Ardra, is that a tribble being boiled alive?" Xena takes the advantage and lets loose a flurry of karate chops to the Klingon's bony skull-plate. The warrior falls.

Round Five: A thousand Trekkies rush to the defense of their hero. "No way could Xena beat Worf! It's no fair!" They stop dead in their tracks at the sight of all the female Xena fans. "Um ... well, maybe. Wanna get a soda and talk about it?"

Winner: Xena

SHIVAN DRAGON

Game: Magic: The Gathering
Size: About the size of an F-15 fighter jet
Biggest Advantage: Pumpable with red mana

VS.

DUNKELZAHN

Game: Shadowrun
Size: About the size of a fire truck
Biggest Advantage: Can speak in complete sentences

Round One: The Shivan Dragon rises over the skyscrapers, wings spread, letting out an unearthly roar fitting for a living force of mass destruction.
Round Two: Dunkelzahn, as a presidential candidate, calls for Secret Service protection. Three men in dark suits pull guns and start firing at the beast.
Round Three: Shivan Dragon eats them. They were probably no bigger than 1/1 to begin with.
Round Four: The Shivan opens its gaping maw and lets loose a fountain of flame. The heat is intercepted by a Fire Elemental bound to the Shadowrun dragon for just such an occasion. (Those 2057ers are pretty savvy about magic.)
Round Five: Dunkelzahn spreads his own wings and takes to the sky. He's a little out of practice, but he can still get himself airborne. A heavy claw-swipe knocks the Shivan into a spiral, from which the Shivan quickly recovers.
Round Six: Another spurt of Magic flame ruins DZ's custom-made Armani suit. A glimmer of hate grows in the candidate's eyes...
Round Seven: ...as he lets off a spell of his own. A Manabolt—which, being made of mana, burns the Shivan into a 5/5 s'more.
Round Eight: Dunkelzahn calls for Chinese take-out.
Winner: Dunkelzahn

KAKITA TOSHIMOKO

Game: Legends of the Five Rings
Height: 5'7"
Weight: 145 lbs.
Reach: 58" (includes 24" katana)
Protegé: Doji Hoturi, noble Crane samurai

VS.

OBI-WAN KENOBI

Game: Star Wars
Height: 5'10"
Weight: 160 lbs.
Reach: 65" (includes 30" lightsaber)
Protegé: Luke Skywalker, whining farmboy Jedi

They say age and treachery will outwit youth and skill. What about age and skill? Kakita Toshimoko is called the "Gray Crane" but he can slice through ninja without breaking a sweat. Obi-Wan's eligible for Social Security on Tatooine, but a Jedi Knight can give any samurai a run for his koku. When blades start flashing, it's time to separate the men from the boys.
Round One: Toshimoko slips into a fighting stance. "I stand for honor." Obi-Wan glares. "I stand for honor."
Kakita: "Really? What about respect, duty and training?"
Kenobi: "These are the values of a Jedi."
Kakita: "Hm. Maybe we're not supposed to fight after all. Join me and battle in the name of the Emperor!"
Kenobi: "The Emperor?!? You must fall, Imperial lackey!"
Round Two: Obi-Wan stares at his foe, hand on his lightsaber, awaiting the proper moment. Toshimoko stares back, trusting in the Tao of Shinsei to show him the way.
Round Three-Nine: More meditation. You can feel the power charging the air between these competitors.
Round 10-22: You can also feel the grass growing beneath your feet.
Round 23: A cricket chirps. Toshimoko draws the Ancestral Sword of the Crane as a blue beam rises to meet it. Obi-Wan gasps as the katana faces the blow unharmed. "Strength of Purity," smiles Toshimoko.
Round 24-27: The two swordsmen trade strikes until Toshimoko's blade slices a gash across Obi-Wan's belly. Kenobi slumps obligingly to the ground. "You...are a worthy adversary. May...the Force...be with you..." Kakita sips his sake. "Ah, but Kenobi-san...I have Force. And Chi."
Winner: Kakita Toshimoko

SARUMAN

Game: Middle-earth
Height: 6'3"
Weight: 185 lbs.
Reach: 43"
Dream Date: Samantha Stevens

VS.

RAISTLIN

Game: AD&D
Height: 6'1"
Weight: 159 lbs.
Reach: 41"
Dream Date: Sabrina, the Teenage Witch

A couple of heavyweight-wannabees who need help holding up their pants on a normal day are about to unleash the forces of the cosmos in an effort to prove which wizard should indeed get to rule the fantasy realms.

Round One: Oooo... spooky. Raistlin goes for the intimidation factor by staring at his opponent with those creepy hourglass-shaped eyes. Saruman backs off a bit, not much of a threat without his staff. Too bad the pansy let Gandalf take it from him.

Round Two: This bout's a rout! Raistlin zings off a fireball that everyone but Saruman saw coming. Put up your gloves man! Defend yourself!

Round Three: Saruman dives in for the clutch, desperately trying to avoid—Oh no! He's bitten off a chunk of Raistlin's ear!

Round Four: Raistlin is honkin' mad now. He whacks Saruman with his staff. How those blows can hurt, we don't know, but it looks like Saruman is about to fold like a card table.

Winner: Saruman

THE ORCS

Game: Warhammer
Average Height: 7'3"
Average Weight: 379 lbs.
Average Reach: 40"
Average IQ: 52

VS.

THE BORG

Game: Star Trek CCG
Average Height: 5'11"
Average Weight: 315 lbs.
Average Reach: 40"
IQ (Collective): 45,687

Can the fat, smelly orcs overcome the coldly logical Borg Collective? Or will the asexual cyborgs triumph over their stupid, inbred opponents? It doesn't take a genius to call this one, folks!

Round One: Here come da orcs! They rush in without a plan, trusting their muscle and smell will overwhelm the Borg.

Round Two: The Borg mow them down by the hundreds with their assimilated technology.

Round Three: Here come da orcs! More phaser fodder for the Borg.

Round Four: Ugh. The stench of roasted orcflesh...

Round Five: Here come da orcs! Nothing stands in their way—not sweat, not drool, not common sense—as they drive their army of monster trucks straight for the heart of the Borg. Va-Room!

Round Six: Out in space, the Borg Queen presses a button and her Cube transports another 30,000 troops to the planet. It takes 37 to level the orc vehicles.

Round Seven: The Borg surround the sniveling, abusive orc refugees.

Round Eight: What the...? The Borg Queen has sounded the retreat only moments after beginning her assimilation of the head orc! "They cannot be assimilated! Do not add them to the Collective! I'll kill the first rustbucket who adds their imbecility to our hive! Run away! Run away!"

Winner: The Orcs

PREDATOR

Game: Aliens/Predator CCG
Height: 7'6"
Weight: 410 lbs.
Reach: 46"
Greatest Triumph: Holds belt from "Contest of Champions II"

VS.

BEHOLDER

Game: AD&D
Height: 4'3"
Weight: 217 lbs.
Reach: Able to touch the hearts of millions
Greatest Triumph: Once ate entire truckload of Twinkies without puking

As the returning champion, and currently belt-holder from "Contest of Champions II," the Predator has made it perfectly clear he's after one of the biggest trophies of his career—the Beholder's skull. This is certainly a grudge match as the Beholder has been out for blood ever since he found out the Predator was sleeping with his wife.

Round One: The Beholder makes a crucial error right up front. Finally getting a bead on the elusive Predator, the Beholder picks one of his eyebeams at random and zaps his prey with an anti-magic ray. Unfazed, the science-based Predator chortles, shakes it off and takes out half of the Beholder's eyestalks.

Round Two: The Beholder's hurtin'. He backs away from the Predator, preparing to fire his death ray—and the Predator nails him with that nifty wrist blaster. The Beholder's down to a single stalk.

Round Three: The Beholder desperately rushes the Predator. Ooooh! Trust the mighty hunter to take a cheap shot, kicking the Beholder in the family jewels.

Round Four: It's over! The Beholder's down for the count. The Predator wastes no time adding another prized skull trophy to his collection.

Round Five: Look out! Mrs. Beholder's loose from the crowd. She's comin' up quick and shouting something that sounds like "My hero!"

Round Six: Gross! She's humping his leg!

BARON SENGIR

Game: Magic: The Gathering
Height: 6'6"
Weight: 230 lbs.
Reach: 39"
Biggest Disappointment:
Homelands voted second-crappiest Magic expansion

VS.

COUNT VLADIMIR RUSTOVICH

Game: Werewolf: The Apocalypse
Height: 6'1"
Weight: 170 lbs.
Reach: 35"
Biggest Disappointment:
No cameo in "Kindred: The Embraced"

A fangfest from the word "slurp," this one's a real shudder. Two power-hungry vampire lords with powerful legions looking to corrupt and despoil the world. Baron Sengir is the progenitor of the Sengir Vampire (still the coolest Magic vampire ever); Count Rustovich is on the board of directors of Werewolf's PENTEX corporation and knows the Wyrm on a first-name basis. Frankly, folks, it's bad news no matter who wins.

Round One: Baron Sengir peers imperiously down at the vaguely human-sized Count. "Shouldn't you be hawking cereal somewhere, little man?" Rustovich responds by taking the shape of a nine-foot-tall demon bat. The Baron whimpers piteously.

Round Two-Four: Vlad introduces Sengir to the fleshcrafting art of Vicissitude, turning the Baron's internal organs into a meaty salad.

Round Five: Back in humanoid shape, the Count hoists Sengy into the air by the scruff of the neck and gives him a Potence-powered kick in the keister, sending him flying. He lands on the doorstep of the Wizards of the Coast offices.

Round Six-Nine: Baron Sengir argues furiously with the Magic design team. Peter Adkison refuses to buy White Wolf in order to fix the match. The DCI says it'll work something out.

Round 10: Baron Sengir flies back to the ring.

Round 11: Vlad prepares to hand the Baron another thrashing, but his blows do no good. Sengir smiles and shows the Cainite the latest DCI ruling: Baron Sengir is errata'd to read: "Counts as a vampire and can now regenerate himself." Rustovich gets a Soul Burn like you wouldn't believe.

Winner: Baron Sengir

BATTLE COW

Game: Battle Cattle
Height (hoof to shoulder): 5'6"
Weight: 2,144 lbs.
Reach: 42"
Most Embarrassing Moment: InQuest #29, "Games that Suck" article

VS.

THE SHEEP

Game: Settlers of Catan
Average Height (hoof to shoulder): 3'2"
Average Weight: 178 lbs.
Average Reach: 21"
Most Embarrassing Moment: Farmer Haggett

The sheep seem to be facing insurmountable odds. They certainly have their work cut out for them. The question on everyone's mind at this point: steaks or hagis for dinner?

Round One: The Cow's first blast takes out six of the herd. The other sheep are scattering, some for the forest and the rest for the mountains, while a few are staying behind to buy them time for their escape. You gotta feel bad for the sheep. What fool scheduled this match?

Round Two: ZAP! There goes another sweater that'll never be made.

Round Three: What's going on? The forest sheep are returning and they're carrying...some kind of hollowed-out log?

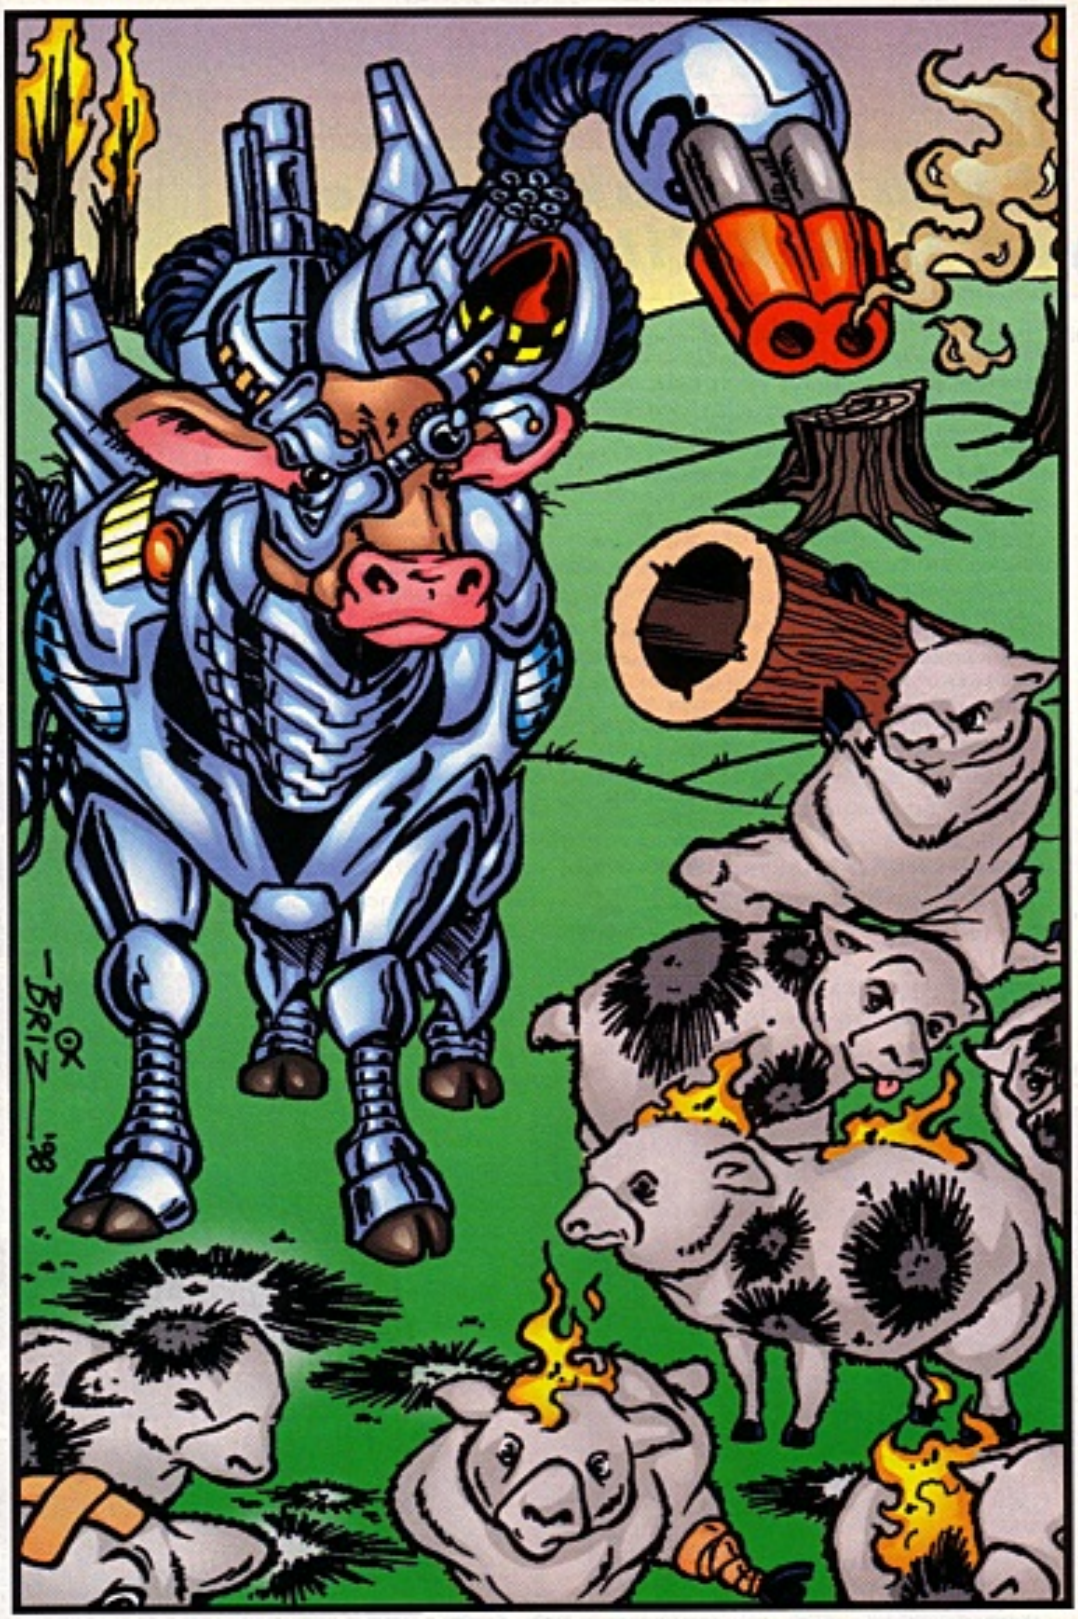

Round Four: ZAP! What a waste of perfectly good lamb chops.

Round Five: Wait! The mountain sheep come back. What are they doing with those diamonds and that powdery substance?

Round Six: BOOM! Amazing! The cow is down! The sheep constructed a crude cannon from a log, diamonds and sulfur a la Captain Kirk when he fought the Gorn. Boy, do these sheep know their "Trek"!

Round Seven: The battle cow is udderly defeated by a flock of real baaaa-d asses.

Winner: The Sheep

That wraps up this year's "Contest of Champions." We had screaming warriors, dueling dragons, assimilated orcs and scorched sheep... a little bit of everything. So what match-ups would you like to see? You never know, "Contest of Champions IV" might pit your favorites head to head...

The InQuest staff went head-to-head... Pens and dice were no match for our favorite mascot's hairballs.

The Chosen Ones

Readers pick 1997's best games By the InQuest staff

It's a time for laughin' and a time for cryin'. Some games walked away with more than they deserved, while others went home empty-handed. The fans have spoken...and more often than not, they're speaking with one voice. A deluge of votes—tabulated on the bloody fingers of one of the prisoners in our dungeon—add up to a lot of opinions on the part of the fans. He was mighty grateful to those who couldn't follow directions and voted for things not released in 1997; he didn't count those. However, those ballots that were counted seemed to agree on most things...

BEST CCG

Shadowrun almost 2-1 over its closest competitor, Dune.
All of us here at InQuest would like to know the name of the solitary buttweasel who sent in that one vote for Imajica; we'll send you all the extras we didn't send to game-starved kids in Africa.

BEST RPG

Legend of the Five Rings (L5R) wallopped Men in Black almost 3-1.
For those folks who wrote in for Trinity, don't be disappointed; it'll show up on the 1998 ballot. Hopefully, it won't have changed its name again by then.

BEST BOARD GAME

Lionheart by a landslide. Games editor Jeff Hannes went into seizures when it beat out Twilight Imperium. He was all right, though, after we placed a Jester's Cap under his tongue.

BEST MINIATURES PRODUCT

In a close race, Epic 40,000 narrowly beat out Moondragon for the win by a mere four votes. Just out of curiosity...How many of you voters have actually played Moondragon?

BEST CARD GAME

We were ecstatic that the "game of choice" around the office here was noticed by the fans; they voted Titan: The Arena the champ over a distant-second Dilbert: Corporate Shuffle. Look for a Titan: The Arena sequel with a sci-fi theme later this year.

BEST CCG EXPANSION

In the first category of the Magic sweep, Weatherlight ran rampant over its competitors, scoring more than five times the votes of Dagobah or Time of the Void. Even Tempest, a Magic write-in, challenged them for second place.

BEST RPG SUPPLEMENT

AD&D still rules the RPG world as Domains of Dread beat out a strong and surprising second-place Delta Green supplement for Call of Cthulhu. What amazed us most was the work some people had gone to organizing a write-in campaign for Conspiracy X's Cryptozoology.

FAVORITE ARTIST

In the closest race of the awards, Phil Foglio narrowly escaped the grasp of Brom by less than 10 votes to walk away with the victory. We have the feeling that Phil's mom may have voted more than once.

FAVORITE HERO

No surprises. Tempest's Gerrard wailed on L5R's Akodo Toturi, smashing him by more than five times the number of votes. Rick Swan was disqualified since 1997 was not his first appearance. His mother may also have voted more than once.

FAVORITE VILLAIN

Same story here: Greven il-Vec stompped Yogo Junzo by a ratio of nearly 6-1 to complete the Magic sweep. Greven, however, stunned us all by announcing that he would give his award to Marv Albert who received a write-in vote. "His talent has gone unrecognized for too long... I still have a lot to learn from Marv," Greven said. Fellow vote-getters Yoda and Wizards of the Coast were untouched by this show of generosity.

COOLEST MOMENT

In another close race, L5R's "Victory of the Lion Clan" at '97's GenCon narrowly defeated "Dr. Van Richten's sacrifice" from the AD&D product Bleak House. Look out in 1998 when we expect the big event to be introduction of the Buttweasel Clan with Cow Nose the samurai.

HALL OF FAME

Magic and AD&D kicked the collective asses of all other pretenders to their throne. Magic got six times and AD&D garnered five times the votes of the third-place contenders. Axis & Allies, BattleTech, Call of Cthulhu and Vampire: The Masquerade all ran a pretty close race for that slot; next year, two of them should see some glory. In the meanwhile, before next year, voters—other than the 10 of you who voted for it—should check out Champions Fourth Edition. It finished an undeserved dead last.

And when planning your votes for next year, remember: The more you play, the more you know.

Into The EXILE ZONE

InQuest's first-ever roleplaying adventure

Written by the InQuest staff.
Artwork by Paul Butler and Allen G. Douglas

There are no prisons in the city of Lorinthar. No holding cells, no walled grounds. The guilty are not tortured or put to death, nor are they rehabilitated. There is only one sentence for criminals in Lorinthar—the Exile Zone.

No one knows how the Exile Zone came to be, but the people of the land know of its existence. In the northern reaches of Lorinthar, there is a large expanse of land polluted by chaotic magic. Those who cross the borders of the Zone are trapped in the mysterious region.

None have returned. Being exiled to the Zone is a life sentence.

WHAT IS THIS?

"Into the Exile Zone" is a fantasy roleplaying adventure (also called a "module") for four to six players. It is designed to be plugged into an existing RPG campaign or used as the springboard for a new campaign. The module is divided into two parts. Part one is what you're reading right now and contains the detailed plot of the adventure. Part two is contained in the module booklet which came with this issue. It includes all the background information about the Exile Zone and the neighboring city of Lorinthar.

The module booklet also includes a map of the Zone and game statistics for Advanced Dungeons & Dragons, GURPS and Earthdawn, but the adventure can easily be modified to fit any system. All locations, such as the kingdom of Quaylen, can be changed to locations within your campaign world, allowing you to plug this adventure into your existing campaign.

What follows is for the GAME MASTER ONLY. In fact, if a friend of yours is going to run this module, you shouldn't have even read this far. If you're planning on running this module, you should read the module booklet first, and then come back here to read the plot details below. In either case, make sure you've read everything at least once (preferably twice) before running this adventure.

Adventure Background

About a week ago, Roland Hathord, a diplomat from the Kingdom of Quaylen, was sent to open trade negotiations with Lorinthar. Shortly after his arrival in the city, he was wrongly accused of committing a crime and immediately sentenced to the Exile Zone by one of the city's guard captains.

When news of this reached Devon Gaston, the mayor of Lorinthar, it put him in a panic. If word reached Quaylen, Lorinthar could suffer retribution. Since Gaston's communications with those inside the Zone have unexpectedly ceased, there is only one solution; he must send a group of adventurers into the Zone to retrieve Diplomat Hathord.

The catch, which Gaston won't reveal, is that all people entering the Zone are transformed into creatures—including the adventurers.

BEGINNING THE ADVENTURE

The first thing you need to do is to get your group's player characters (PCs) into the city of Lorinthar. The easiest way is to have this adventure take place right after the PCs finish their latest quest. After reaping their reward, an existing NPC (the person that hired them, a longtime friend, etc.) recommends that they get some rest and relaxation in the city of Lorinthar. It's got all sorts of nifty shops—a great place to spend their newly found loot—and the NPC has a friend in the city who owes him a favor. If the PCs go to the inn named The Golden Talon, the owner, Bernard Mickell, will take good care of them.

Alternatively, the PCs can be sent by their king or a representative to find out why a diplomat they sent a week ago (i.e., Roland Hathord) hasn't returned. If you take this approach, you'll need to make some modifications to the beginning of the module; however, make sure the PCs have a chance to explore the city a bit before they take off for the Zone.

THE CITY OF LORINTHAR

Lorinthar is about a week from the PCs' current location. What happens—if anything—on the way to the city is up to you. Once the PCs get there, read the following:

As you reach a crest in the road, the city of Lorinthar comes into view. Even from this distance you can tell that it is a place of wealth and prosperity. There are buildings of two-stories or more, and the roofs are tiled with the scales of great beasts, not thatched. As you approach the ornately decorated gates, you see two guards standing on either side of the city entrance. They are both dressed in lavish armor that is like none you've ever seen. As you get closer, you notice that the armor is a coat of intricate scales. One of the guards is garbed in bright purple, the other in deep crimson, and both have long, curved swords at their sides.

When you reach the gate, the guard in crimson stretches his arms wide and says, "Welcome to Lorinthar."

Although they appear equipped for it, the guards are not looking for trouble. They are simply there to greet the PCs. They will ask them if they are here for business or pleasure, and if the PCs have any specific questions about locations within the city, the guards will be as helpful as they can. As the PCs enter the gates, the guard in purple tells them the following:

"You are welcome to partake of all the pleasantries and fineries our city has to offer. I submit but one word of caution: We city guards don't take kindly to people who cause trouble, so you might want to make sure you're not one of them. Keep that in mind and you should have an enjoyable stay."

Once inside the gates, the PCs are free to explore the city, exploring the various shops, services and entertainment Lorinthar has to offer. The one thing the PCs will clearly notice is that everything in the city is exotic. See the module booklet for more detailed information on the people and places in Lorinthar.

The Golden Talon

Eventually, the PCs will find their way to The Golden Talon, either because it was recommended to them or because that's the first inn they happen to enter. Like every other place in Lorinthar, The Talon is lavishly decorated. The chairs are draped with the skins of exotic beasts, the tables are crafted from high quality lumber and the floors are carpeted with finely woven rugs.

Bernard Mickell, the owner of The Talon, introduces himself to the PCs; if they were sent to Lorinthar, he knows who they are and that he's repaying a debt through them. Whatever the case, he's jovial and courteous, inviting the PCs to dine in his inn. The menu is filled with steaming meats and spicy brews of which the PCs have never heard, such as the crunchy zenobord or the sweet jaffelkop. After the dinner, Bernard offers the PCs rooms, as many as they desire. The PCs will likely notice that the doors have no locks. If asked about this, Bernard shrugs and tells them, "It isn't necessary."

The evening passes uneventfully, and in the morning, Bernard has prepared breakfast for the PCs. While they're eating, he says he hopes they've enjoyed his hospitality, and he's wondering if they might do a small favor for him. Devon Gaston, the mayor of Lorinthar, is looking for a group of adventurers.

If the PCs are reluctant about meeting with Gaston, Bernard points out that Gaston is a representative of the city, and the city is extremely wealthy. If that doesn't entice the PCs...ah well, you're on your own.

Meeting with the Mayor

The PCs make their way to Gaston's estate, a sprawling manor with a magnificent garden. At the gate, they are greeted by a pair of guards. One says the mayor is expecting them and escorts the party to the entrance of the manor. From there, a servant has the PCs wait in the parlor. Gaston, a heavy-set man in his fifties, enters the room a few minutes later. A taller man, the wizard Xanalor, draped in elegant robes, walks beside him and takes a seat in the corner of the room. Gaston sits across from the PCs and addresses them:

"Well, first I'd like to thank you for agreeing to meet with me. I trust you have enjoyed your stay in Lorinthar thus far?"

Gaston will engage the PCs in some brief small talk. Through it all, the wizard remains silent. If the PCs ask about him, Gaston will introduce him as his aide, Xanalor. Xanalor, the city wizard, nods at the PCs and will answer any questions directed toward him, but until his services are necessary, he will keep a low profile. When the pleasantries are done, read the following:

The Mayor's demeanor shifts as his expression grows somber. In a soft tone, he addresses you. "What I am about to tell you must stay in the strictest of confidence. Despite our successes, we have a potentially serious problem. A week ago, Roland Hathord, an ambassador from the kingdom of Quaylen, came to survey our city with the potential of opening trade negotiations. Things were proceeding well until there was a mishap in the marketplace.

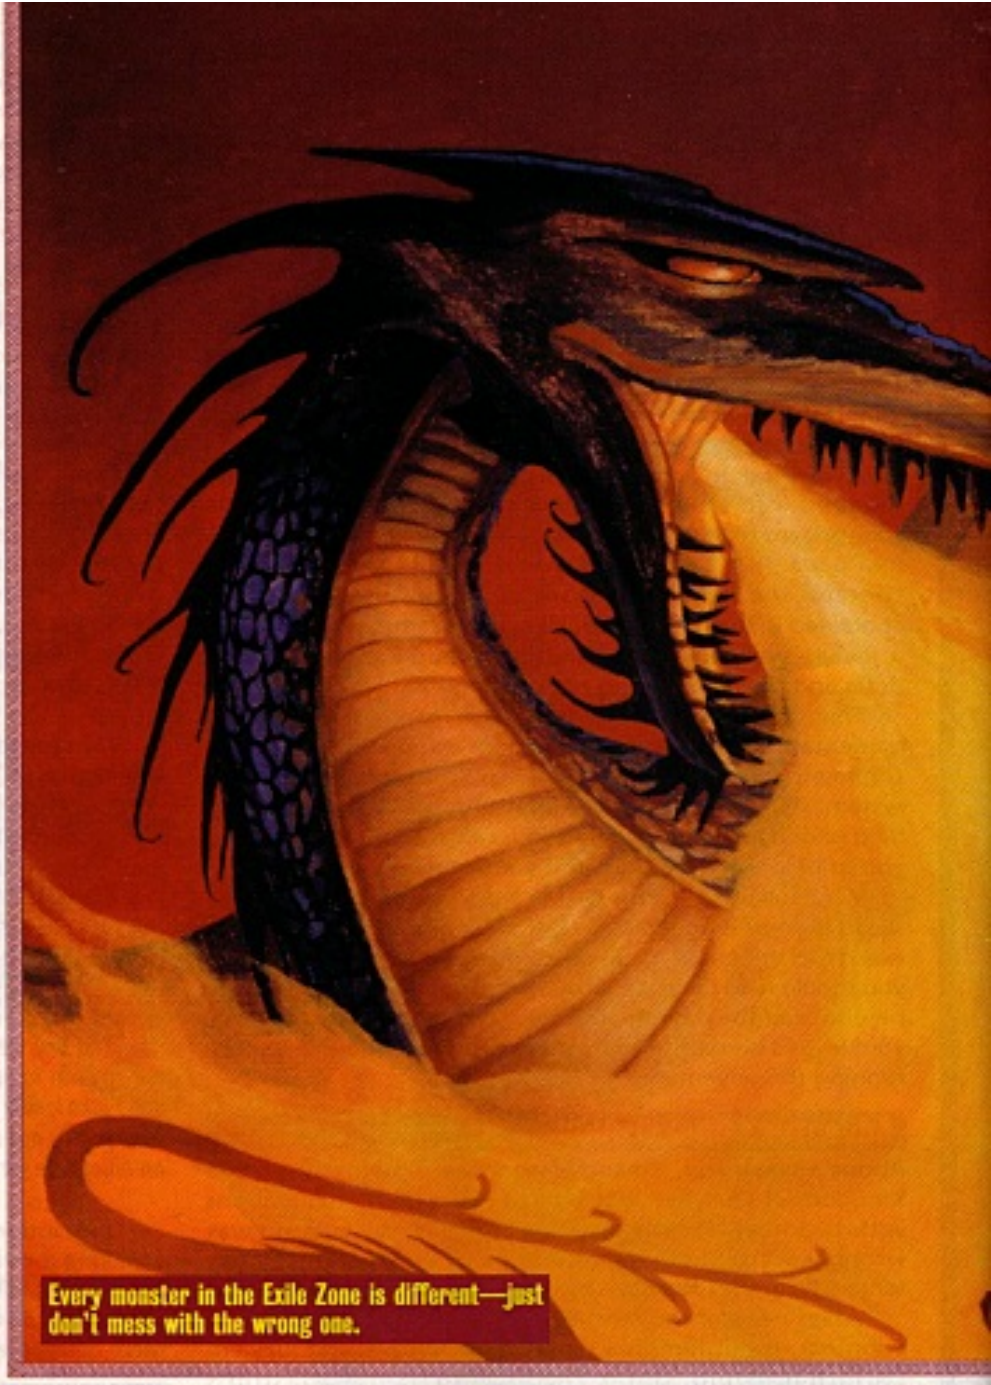

"Through a misunderstanding, Hathord was accused of committing a crime and, because our guard captains have leave to do so, he was found guilty and sentenced shortly thereafter. You see, there is but one sentence for those found guilty of committing a crime in Lorinthar: They are sent to the Exile Zone. The Zone is a place to the north of here, a place of madness. Those who enter the Zone do not return.

"Clearly the diplomat must not have been guilty, but the captain acted in haste. I assure you the captain has been reprimanded for his impetuousness, but that is the least of our worries at this point. We need a group to enter the Zone—under the protection of magic, of course. There you need to find Hathord and bring him back to the city. If the ambassador is not recovered, the diplomatic repercussions could be severe. We are prepared to reward you well if you succeed. Will you help us?"

Gaston will negotiate a reward with the PCs, offering them any request (within reason), and that you, as a GM, feel comfortable. Just don't promise so much that it seems like this is an impossible quest. The reward should be significant, but reasonable.

If the PCs accept, Xanalor will prepare them for the Zone. He explains that the Zone causes unpredictable effects, not the least of which can be madness, but he can protect the PCs from the Zone's effects by inscribing a magical sigil on each of them (see diagram, page 94). He also casts a Sigil of Location upon the party leader, explaining that this sigil will act as a compass, glowing brighter when the PCs are moving towards Hathord's current location.

After the sigils have been cast, Gaston wishes the PCs luck and Xanalor escorts them to the edge of the Zone. Xanalor isn't much of a talker, so the PCs are treated to a tour of storefronts, wealthy merchants and the cobblestone road wandering out to meet the ominous forest to the north. Before the PCs enter the Zone, Xanalor warns them that the sigils will only last for 24 hours. Once they find Hathord, they must bring him back to the entrance, where Xanalor will cast a spell allowing them to exit the Zone.

Every monster in the Exile Zone is different—just don't mess with the wrong one.

INTO THE EXILE ZONE

Once all of the PCs have crossed the barrier to the Zone, read the following text:

As you move into the barrier, you feel as though you are being sucked into a vortex. Everything around you slows to a crawl and the trees transform into a blinding array of shimmering lights. A searing pain rips through you, and you feel as if your skin is being ripped from your body. You drop to your knees, or at least it seems that way. You can feel your bones moving under your skin as the air is forced out of your lungs, but you've lost all sense of your body. You instinctively try to cry out in pain, but all that emerges is a burning, a flame shooting from your mouth. You try to bring your hands to your throat, but you don't even know where your hands are.

Suddenly, in one explosive burst, the pain leaves you and you drop to the ground. The world comes back into view, but when you open your eyes, you see several bizarre creatures staring back. After a few disorienting moments, you notice the sigils glowing bright red on each of the creatures...These monstrosities are your companions.

The PCs have been transformed into monsters by the magic of the Exile Zone. From this point forward, they will play the creatures included in the Module Booklet (pages 8-13). Xanalor's sigil allows the PCs to maintain their intelligence and speak to each other, but all clothing and equipment has transformed with the PCs, and they have lost all of their mental, natural and/or spellcasting abilities. (Note: The flowmorph can only speak if he forms a mouth.) You can choose which players will become which monsters randomly or based on how much you think certain players would enjoy being certain monsters. If you have less than six players, use the monsters in the order in which they appear in the booklet.

At this point, show the PCs the pictures of the monsters they have become, but not the stats. Give the PCs a chance to explore their new abilities, with subtle hints to help them along with some of the more obscure examples. Each monster has a section titled "Weird Sensations" which you can use to help the PCs discover their abilities.

Once the PCs have had plenty of time to experiment, you can give them copies of their new characters. Alternatively, you can hold on to the stats, only giving PCs specific information when it is relevant and letting them know what their damage level is through descriptions like, "That last shot just nicked you" or "You're in so much pain you can barely stand." Whichever method you choose will depend largely upon the personal preference of you and, more importantly, your players.

The PCs may choose to try and leave the Zone; this is doomed to failure (see booklet, page 6). Or they may use the Sigil of Location to begin searching for Hathord. It will glow slightly once they move deeper into the Zone. Whatever route the players decide to take, there are three key events they will encounter, in the following order:

ENCOUNTER #1: Pack Attack

As the PCs are traveling through the forest, the stalker PC becomes aware that there are several other creatures in the immediate area. Before the PCs have a chance to react, they find themselves surrounded by a pack of eight vicious wolf-like creatures with quills (see page 15 of the booklet for statistics).

The PCs can do whatever they wish, but combat is unavoidable; some wolves will fire their quills at the PCs while maintaining the perimeter, and the rest will move in for the attack. The wolves are not really meant to hurt the PCs; once a few of the wolves have dropped, the rest will flee.

The purpose of this encounter is to give the PCs a chance to fight using their new abilities. Here is also your first chance to show the PCs that they are not completely protected from the influences of the Zone. Throughout the course of the module, there will be times when a character's bestial instincts take over their rationality. Each time this happens, the sigil

THE NATURE OF THE BEAST

During the adventure, the PCs will sometimes succumb to their bestial nature. Each time this happens, the sigil protecting them becomes a little dimmer. Here are a few examples of how the Zone begins to take its toll on the player characters:

BALEWORM	Becomes very impulsive and quick to act or attack without giving it much thought.
FLOWMORPH	Feels very sluggish and lethargic, with little desire to do anything.
GEOPHAGE	The geophage is more apt to become agitated, physically lashing out at a companion with whom he has an argument.
GRUBSKIN	Raw meat consumes the PC's attention. After an enemy dies, the grubskin will try and eat it.
STALKER	Becomes paranoid, overly sensitive that the group is being watched or hunted.
WINGED SLURRY	Is easily startled and its instinctive reaction in a dangerous situation is to immediately flee.

becomes a little bit darker. See the "Nature of the Beast" sidebar (above) for tips on how to do this effectively. When these slips happen is up to you; the best time is when the PCs are frustrated or wasting time.

ENCOUNTER #2: Rumble in the Woods

As the PCs continue searching for Hathord, they can make out sounds like wailing and the crash of trees in the distance. As the PCs get closer, they hear the roars and growls of two distinct creatures.

When you look out into the clearing, you see a fearsome sight. Two creatures—both easily twice your size—are locked in a struggle. One, a lizard-like creature with horns protruding from its face, neck and shoulders seems to have the upper hand on the other, a crab-like creature with six pincer arms. Both creatures are heavily splattered with blood—whose you cannot be certain; however, you can make out the magical glow of a sigil on each of them.

The PCs can watch the battle to its conclusion, or get involved if they desire. If any of the PCs asks for more detail about the sigils, he will notice that, while both sigils on the monsters are the same, they are different than the sigil the PCs possess. Regardless of what the PCs do to get involved, the lizard creature will defeat the crab creature, killing it, and then flee into the woods. The PCs can follow the tracks, but they will not be able to keep pace. Alternatively, if the PCs stop to listen, they hear the faint sound of moving water from the nearby lake. They may choose to go that way instead of following the tracks. Either way, the PCs will come across the next encounter.

The purpose of this encounter is to clue the PCs into the fact that something is going on here; there are other intelligent creatures in the Zone. Why or how this is possible, the PCs don't know.

ENCOUNTER #3: Pit Trap

While traveling along, the stalker PC suddenly stops and his whiskers prick up. He smells something; he's not sure what, but it's drawn his notice. The rest of the PCs smell nothing. The stalker is compelled to follow the smell, and soon, when the PCs are within about 50 feet, it becomes apparent what has caught his attention—a huge slab of raw meat hanging above the ground.

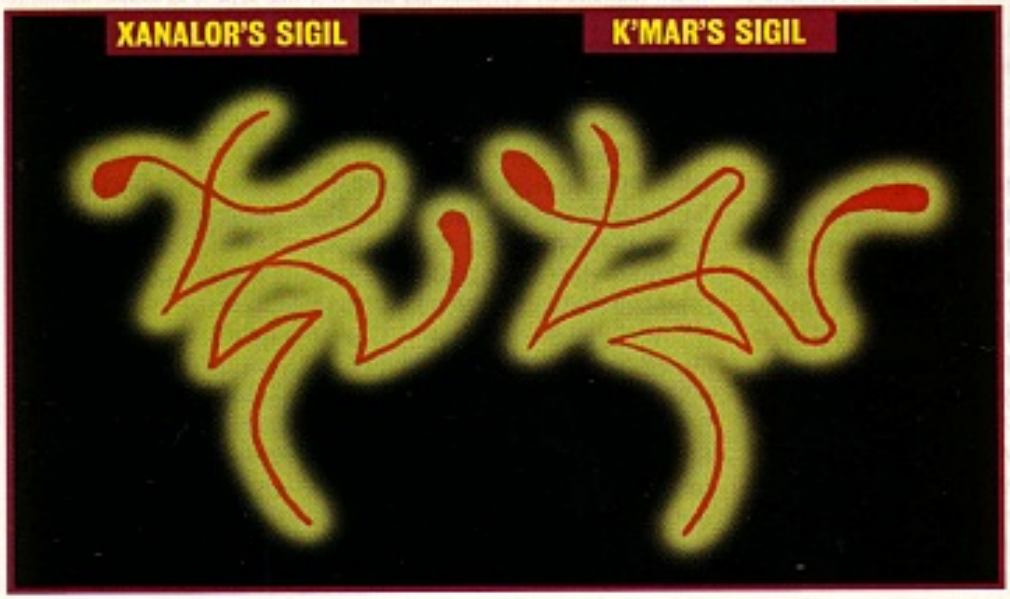

The stalker is salivating and is uncontrollably drawn to the meat. As he gets within 10 feet of it, he suddenly drops out of sight. The fall is 15 feet; most likely, the PC won't get hurt. After the stalker falls, he returns to his senses, no longer consumed by his urges. The pit is 10'x20', clearly made by intelligent creatures and not difficult to escape given a little bit of thought. The pit was designed for non-sentient beasts, so if the PCs put a little brain power into it—simply climbing out won't work—the stalker can easily escape. For example, the geophage could knock down a tree to use as a ramp or the baleworm could dig an inclined tunnel.

Alternatively, the PCs may choose to leave a character in the pit and hide in the brush, waiting for someone to arrive. Regardless of what they choose to do, a small band of the renegades will approach before they have a chance to leave the area.

You see a large band of creatures approaching you. Each is unlike any creature you have ever seen. One has tassel-like feathers that drape its skin. Another has long curved spikes emanating from just about every part of its body. Yet another has a thin, insectoid frame and razor-sharp pincers. All of the creatures are unique; and you realize that all of them bear a sigil like the one you saw earlier.

Before you can act or speak, the insectoid creature takes a step forward. Acidic saliva drips from its mouth as it opens its mandibles... and speaks.

"Why are you here?"

The leader, Morlen, is cautious, and as soon as he is satisfied that the PCs are not allied with K'mar, he will abruptly cut them off and say, "We must leave. It is not safe here now that you have triggered the trap." The renegade creatures lead the PCs back to their village, advising them to be as quiet as possible (see location 3 on page 6 of Module Booklet).

There are several reasons for

this encounter. The most obvious is to introduce the PCs to the villagers. This encounter also serves to establish that there is a bad guy (someone setting traps) and it is an opportunity to have a PC succumb to his bestial nature.

THE RENEGADES' VILLAGE

Once the PCs reach the village, Morlen will begin answering questions, including the story of who the renegades are. He can tell the PCs much of the backstory, including how K'mar harnessed the power of the Zone to cast permanent sigils, and how the city of Lorinthar has been sending innocents to the Zone. He will also tell them of how the renegades fled K'mar's stronghold and how they have been hunted; however, he will not tell them the full extent of events: how creatures are being slaughtered, skinned and sold back to Lorinthar in a ghastly trade circle. This is a taboo subject for Morlen and his followers, and they will not speak of these abominations.

If the PCs ask about the diplomat, the renegades have not seen him, but Morlen will tell the PCs that if Hathord is still alive, he has most likely been captured by now.

If the PCs offer to go to K'mar's stronghold, the renegades will do what they can to help. They will tell the PCs how to get to the stronghold, and if the PCs are willing to try and take down K'mar, a small group will volunteer to create a diversion while the PCs find a way to enter. With the amount of troops K'mar possesses, the diversion will most likely be fatal, but the creatures are willing to make the sacrifice for the sake of the others trapped in the Zone and the thousands more who could be sent into it if K'mar is not stopped.

THE TRANSMUTER'S TOWER

The volunteered renegades will lead the PCs to within a mile of K'mar's stronghold. On the way, one of the renegades suddenly stops, looking quizzically into the distance. When questioned, he explains that there used to be a tower on the hill off to the south; now, for some unknown reason, it's gone. The tower belonged to the transmuter who created the Zone (although the renegades do not know this).

If the PCs choose to explore the ruins, they find that all that's left of the 30-foot diameter tower is the foundation. The walls that remain go only a few feet above the ground, and the stone staircase leads down into what was the tower's basement, now open to the sky. The tower has been completely looted by K'mar's minions, and the tower itself has been dismantled and taken to use as building materials to improve K'mar's stronghold. As such, there is very little rubble. There are, however, a large variety of tracks leading in the direction of the stronghold.

If the PCs examine the basement, they find plenty of scorch marks, but little else. The only noteworthy item is a small piece of paper, ripped from a larger piece. It is only a small scrap, at least 50 years old. There is not enough writing on the paper to decipher anything, but a PC who was a spellcaster can determine that it is from a spellbook.

However, there is something substantial to be found if the flowmorph PC explores the cracks in the walls—several sheets of the same paper. A skilled mage may be able to determine that the spell on the pages is some kind of powerful transmutation spell; any character that can read will be able to understand the wizard's notes scrawled in the margins.

The notes give insight into the history of the Zone, including the wizard's intent to create a "mobile field of transmutational energy," which would allow him to change his form. There are also notes which describe the field as unstable and his difficulties with keeping the field contained.

INFILTRATING K'MAR'S FORTRESS

It is about 20 minutes before sundown when the PCs approach the fortress, and they find it is much more than they expected. What was supposed to be a small keep set into the mountain has been transformed into a heavily fortified structure. Various monsters are working on improvements, hefting stone blocks into place on various parts of the keep. Twenty humanoid monsters are encamped in front of the stronghold (see page 15 of the booklet for stats).

To enter the stronghold, the PCs have four basic options:

1. Try and enter through the front gate. While feasible, this is highly unlikely. The PCs would have to defeat almost all of the monsters, plus they would sound the alarm.

2. Search for a secret entrance. If the PCs scout out the area around the stronghold, they hear the rumbling of water. There is a waterfall about 400 yards from the main entrance. Behind the waterfall is a cave which leads to the monster pen in the keep (area 7 on the map of K'mar's fortress).

3. Burrow through the ground. The baleworm PC can create a tunnel leading into the fortress, although unless the PCs scout the entrance (by sending in the flowmorph, which can go through cracks in the wall), the baleworm will be tunneling blind and show up in a random location.

4. The grubskin PC can have his maggots eat their way through one of the walls, allowing the PCs to enter.

As long as the renegades are causing a diversion, the PCs can accomplish options 2, 3 or 4 without being seen (as long as they're somewhat discreet). If they're not careful, they may have to face a few monsters. Of course, the PCs might try another method; if this happens, use your best judgment.

Inside the Fortress

Once inside the fortress, the PCs will have a chance to explore. As the PCs move through the various rooms, keep in mind that the dimensions of the rooms and hallways are huge, so as to accommodate the array of creatures that moves through them. The hallways are 15-feet wide and the ceilings are as high as 20 feet. Also, the Sigil of Location reaches its maximum intensity once the PCs enter the fortress. When they enter K'mar's lair it will begin to pulse.

1. COURTYARD: A variety of torture devices decorate the courtyard for the pleasure of K'mar and her minions. Several reserve guards are also milling about in this area. If any intruders are detected in the area, the alarm is sounded here and the two massive double-doors are locked from the inside.

2. ENTRY HALL: This well-lit chamber is the central location of the fortress. The guardian (see page 15 of the booklet) has one purpose—to keep others from going through the double doors leading into K'mar's lair (area 8). If the PCs move towards the door, it will scuttle over to block their path and say, "Go way." If the PCs do not comply, it will attack. Otherwise, the guardian will stare at the PCs but ignore them. The stone staircase in the far left corner of the room goes up about 15 feet and hits a ceiling of rubble; the second level of the fortress is still in the process of being built. None of the doors in this room are locked.

3. LIBRARY: This room, filled with fully stacked bookshelves, is K'mar's library. Most of the books here are ones she has pilfered from the transmuter's tower, although she has written several herself. If the PCs spend a significant amount of time in this room, they can learn more about the nature of the Zone—including the existence of the breach (although the location is not given) and how K'mar has managed to tap into the central core of the magic of the Zone, a swirling vortex of magical energy.

4. TREASURE ROOM: The door to this room is locked, but entering is easy enough. The flowmorph can go under the door, the grubskin can have maggots eat their way through the wall, etc. Inside, the room is filled with gold and gems K'mar has collected from the Zone; however, all of these will revert to worthless stones, metals, coal, etc. if the Zone loses its magic.

5. PROCESSING CENTER: As the PCs approach this area, they will be able to make out the cries and howls of K'mar's unfortunate victims. This grim chamber is filled with cruel devices used to help skin and process the body parts of captured creatures. If they're quiet, the PCs can observe the grisly activities of this chamber from the shadows without being detected.

6. STOREROOM: This dimly lit chamber is filled with barrels and crates which contain processed skins, bones and body parts, as well as the skeletons of various stripped creatures. These are materials to be shipped out of the Zone to Lorinthar.

7. MONSTER PEN: This huge cavern houses a great variety of captured beasts, which K'mar will either make minions or have processed into goods. The lone guard is able to keep the magically sedated creatures in line until K'mar determines their fate. Note: The secret waterfall passageway enters the fortress through the corridor at the top of the chamber.

8. K'MAR'S LAIR: This chamber is effectively sealed off from the rest of the fortress. The walls, ceiling and floor are magically reinforced; the only entrance is the double-doors, which K'mar eagerly waits for the PCs to cross. When the PCs enter the room, read the following:

You have entered an enormous chamber, over 100 feet long and at least 40 feet wide. At the back of the room, you can make out a swirling white vortex, which spirals 30 feet up to the ceiling. Lining the walls are ornate pillars crafted of red marble. Chained to several of these pillars are badly beaten and wounded creatures of varying sorts; each has K'mar's sigil imprinted on its body. One of them, a gargoyle that seems to be intrigued by the now pulsing Sigil of Location, immediately catches your eye.

Suddenly, you're aware that there is another pair of eyes set intensely fixed upon you. A gray, frail creature with long gangly arms and legs emerges from the shadows. Its bulbous black eyes stare you up and down. A sigil burns white-hot on its chest. The chained creatures recoil in fear, and in the still of the immense chamber you can hear their frightened whispers. "K'mar...K'mar..."

K'mar is not interested in negotiating; if the PCs don't initiate an attack, she will. Ideally, the PCs will attack first; in response, K'mar shapechanges into an elusive form, and the battle is underway. This should be a hard-fought battle that the PCs soon realize they have little hope of winning. They may get in a blow every now and then, but they won't be able to do enough damage to kill her.

Throughout the combat, K'mar continually changes form to thwart the PCs' attacks, and this is the key to defeating her. PCs who pay attention will notice that the vortex flickers every time K'mar changes form. This is because she is drawing energy from the Zone. If one of the PCs interrupts the flow of energy—by throwing something like a book, a piece of treasure or even a spray of maggots into the vortex while it is flickering—K'mar's tie to the vortex will be severed. Note that if a PC throws something into the vortex while K'mar is not shapechanging, the item will simply dissipate and K'mar will be unaffected. If a PC throws himself into the vortex, it's instant death—hey, look before you leap.

It ain't no picnic living in the Exile Zone.

K'mar knows the secret of the Exile Zone. Can you figure it out before it's too late?

If the PCs are getting whipped and seem to be totally clueless about discovering K'mar's weakness, you can have Hathord (the gargoyle) nudge them in the right direction. Once they defeat her, read the following:

The vortex flashes bright crimson, and you hear K'mar release a bellowing roar. You look at the creature to see it writhing it agony, caught between forms. The color of the vortex begins to deepen, and at the same time, you can see the life draining from K'mar. The ground begins to rumble, and pieces of the ceiling fall around the vortex, which seems to be running red with blood. In a sudden explosion of energy, the vortex shoots into the air, bringing the rocks above it crashing down.

At the same time you are knocked to the ground—not by the explosion, but by the convulsions in your body. Your form begins to morph and twist, as it did when you entered the Zone. The pain is seething, but you manage to maintain consciousness, and through a stream of uncontrollable tears, you can see K'mar transform into the crumpled form of a young woman.

She cries out in a feeble, broken voice. "Weak, helpless..." And with a dying scream she shrivels into a withered husk. Then it is over. You are able to rise to your feet—your human feet.

WRAP-UP

When K'mar dies, the magic of the Zone dissipates and everything, including the PCs and Hathord, returns to normal. If any of the PCs are wearing armor or clothes they purchased in Lorinthar, they are in for a rude awakening: These items are now made of human flesh.

Disoriented, Hathord will ask them what happened and then thank them for rescuing him. The PCs can take whatever actions they wish at this time, but all that remains of their mission is to return Diplomat Hathord to Lorinthar. Outside the fortress, chaos reigns among the disoriented humans who have no recollection of their transformation. The PCs, thanks to Xanalor's sigil, retain full memory. Beyond K'mar's keep, the Zone is eerily silent; there are no more monsters, and a strange stillness blankets the land. Xanalor will not be waiting for the PCs at edge of the zone, but it does not matter. There is no magic to prevent the PCs from leaving. When the PCs finally arrive at Lorinthar, read the following:

Even as you approach the city, you can tell things are not as they should be. There is no noise, no commotion. It is as if you are entering a ghost town. When you arrive at the city gates, it doesn't take long to figure out what has happened. In the shops, where there used to be fine clothes and armor, hang strips of human flesh. The roofs, which had been ornately tiled with mosaics of monster scales, are now draped only with human skin. Some of the buildings are crafted from bricks of bone, others are thatched from decaying tendons, muscles and sinews.

Most of the people have fled the city; those that remain have gone mad from the horror of their predicament. There is a man lying in the street, groaning as he rips at the human flesh that was once his armor. Another man is retching; an over-turned plate and its half-eaten contents are splayed on the ground.

As you come closer, you can see that one of the men in the street is Mayor Gaston. He stumbles towards you crying, "What have you done?"

The PCs can try and speak with Gaston, but it's pointless. He has completely lost all reason. He's trying to rationalize the horrors he has caused within Lorinthar, crying, "But they were criminals!" However, he is clearly consumed by guilt. The whole thing has turned him into a blathering idiot and it should be clear that any promised rewards will never materialize. If the PCs become stagnant, Diplomat Hathord offers suggestions.

All he wants to do is get away from the horror that Lorinthar has become. He proposes that if the PCs escort him back to Quaylen (about a week away), his king would be grateful and would surely reward the PCs—not only from saving Hathord from the Zone but also for preventing what could have been a nationwide disaster if Quaylen had opened trade with Lorinthar. What happens on the way to Quaylen (should the PCs accept the invitation) is up to you, but we'd recommend you give 'em a break.

FUTURE CAMPAIGN IDEAS

There are plenty of ways you can incorporate elements of this module into an ongoing campaign. The PCs may forge a new alliance with the kingdom of Quaylen. Perhaps, after giving them their reward, the King offers them another assignment. There are also several unanswered questions and issues from the adventure that can arise later in your campaign. For example:

- What happened to Xanalor? Answer: He fled as soon as all hell broke loose in Lorinthar. He knew what was happening and he didn't want to be around when the PCs came back. Now, he's off somewhere else, perhaps plotting revenge against the PCs for ruining his prosperous career.
- What happened to the real criminals who had been sent to the Zone? Sure, some of them were innocent, but a lot of the people that survived the Zone were bad people. What happens when you open the floodgates of a prison that big?
- Is the Exile Zone's magic really gone? The destruction of the vortex was possibly a temporary disruption in the Zone's field. Perhaps the Zone arises again and alters the area in another strange way.

META-DECK PROTECTORS

You've seen, and probably used, the durable plastic sleeves that UltraPro markets under the name Deck Protectors. But they're really card protectors, right? Now Rembrandt, the makers of the UltraPro storage line, sells a stack of 75 Deck Protector sleeves in a sturdy polypropylene box that actually protects your whole deck. Seems like they should call the box a "deck protector," but it's too late; the only decent name left was "Deck Boxes." Well... at least, it's descriptive. The boxes are more colorful than the name, with three different designs—Black Lotus, Jester's Cap and Greven il-Vec—that go for $7.98 to $8.98 apiece. Their flip-tops close with spiffy Velcro strips, and UltraPro says they won't crack like ordinary acrylic boxes. And don't forget, each box comes with 75 Deck Protectors. That still sounds wrong....

STEALTH X-WINGS?

You're in good company if you admire writer Aaron Allston, author of dozens of meaty gaming supplements for AD&D, Champions, Car Wars and GURPS, plus novels like Doc Sidhe and Galatea in 2-D. This month, Allston hits the bestseller lists with Wraith Squadron, his first of three licensed X-Wing novels, based on the mega-hit LucasArts computer games set in the Star Wars universe (Bantam Spectra, $5.99).

Allston got Wraith Squadron practically by accident; a Bantam editor pencilled him in as a possible author, resigned soon afterward, and the next editor assumed Allston was already writing the books. Imagine getting a call out of the blue: "So, have you finished writing that Star Wars novel yet?" Aaron took the job and, despite an incredibly tight deadline, came through. In Wraith Squadron, Wedge Antilles— stalwart hero of four other Michael Stackpole X-Wing novels—leads a covert action group of X-Wing pilots in a mission to take over an Imperial warship. Meanwhile, West End Games adapts Stackpole's original X-Wing quartet in the upcoming Rogue Squadron Sourcebook for Star Wars: The Roleplaying Game. Gee, who could they possibly get to adapt Wraith Squadron...?

DRAGONBALL GOES BLIND

You've already got Pioneer's Dragonball Z Resurrection stand-alone expansion for Ani-Mayhem, not to mention the Dragonball Z Playstation console game, posters, trading cards, action figures, T-shirts, flip-top wristwatch and hordes of videos with every episode of the high-action Japanese anime series. Let's see, you've covered your body, your bedroom walls and bedspread, the floor—gasp! Your window! It does not yet partake of the full Dragonball Z experience! You'll want the $34 Dragonball Z bamboo Venetian-style blind from Samurai USA. It features Goku, Gohan, Yamcha, Vegiita and three more Z fighters with names like mixed Sarabble tiles. Check www.samurai-anime.com for more information. Now if only you could dress up your dog....

GHOSTLY GOODIES

And speaking of wraiths (you know, like Wraith Squadron...it's funny), if you're a player of White Wolf's Wraith: The Oblivion RPG, you may have been dismayed by the lack of cool doo-dads available for this game of passion and horror. Fret no more, deadboys and girls. Henry Higgenbotham's Wolf Totem studios has come to your rescue with a line of sculpted stuff for you to scarf. The picture shows the Arcanos magnets ($5 apiece), the Charon pin ($10) and both sides of the Wraith obolus ($10). All magnets are also available as pins and vice versa. Finally, for $25, you can hang the Wraith Key from your neck...if it's still attached. To reach Wolf Totem, check out their site at http://www.mindspring.com/~spigmoid/index.html.

Five B5 CDs

BABYLON 5: SAY IT WITH MUSIC

If you're running Chameleon Eclectic's The Babylon Project RPG, how do you simulate the "Babylon 5" TV show's atmosphere in your game sessions? Hire series creator J. Michael Straczynski to drop by and provide historical footnotes to your plots? Sorry, he's busy working 10 hours a day. Maybe you could spring for a Silicon Graphics workstation to create those cool CGI special effects. Sonic Images offers a far cheaper solution: five CDs of Christopher Franke's original music for "Babylon 5."

The company has already offered two album-length suites amalgamated from various episodes, but each of these new "episodic CDs" ($10.98 apiece) contains about 30 minutes of music from a single third-season show. So far they've released the music from the Hugo-award-winning "Severed Dreams," "Late Delivery from Avalon," "Walkabout," "Shadow Dancing" and, especially good for eerie horror adventures, "Z'Ha'Dum." All works are performed by the Berlin Symphonic Film Orchestra, with Alan Wagner conducting. For more info, e-mail sonicimages@sonicimages.com, or check the Web at www.sonicimages.com/b5. Less-wired customers can send a fax to 213-650-1016.

GO FISH!

When the stars are right and Great Cthulhu rises from his watery house in the sunken city of Rl'yeh... you're probably pretty hosed. But, if you put one of these nifty Cthulhu-fish on the bumper of your car or the back of your notebook, you might get eaten last. These 7 3/4" x 2" metallic stickers parody the popular "Darwin-fish" stickers, themselves a spoof on the Icthyos symbol used as a symbol of the Christian faith. (Talk about an inside joke.) If your local high priest is out of these gold or silver goodies, check your local game store; they retail for about three bucks. Otherwise, contact Chaosium directly at 510-547-7681.

COMPUTER GAME OF THE MONTH

SITH YOU'VE BEEN GONE...

Mysteries of the Sith screens

In last fall's long-awaited Jedi Knight computer game, seven Dark Jedi villains became lightsaber fodder for hero Kyle Katarn. But five years later, the Star Wars computer game hero goes missing, and his budding apprentice, former Empire assassin Mara Jade, has to find him—in the catacombs beneath a temple of the Sith. You know, as in Dark Lord of the Sith? As in Darth Vader?

Mysteries of the Sith, March's add-on scenario disk for Jedi Knight, puts Mara through 14 new scenarios of single-player hell. Her new weapons include a carbonite pellet gun (similar to the Freeze Ray in Duke Nukem 3D), a stationary repeating blaster cannon, a long-range electroscope, a seeker rail detonator, a flash bomb and the BlasTech DL-44 heavy blaster pistol (Han Solo's favorite). Mara also grows wise in the ways of the Force, with new powers like Force Push, Chain Lightning, Lightsaber Throw, Force Projection and Far Sight. And who's she fighting? Name it: a Hutt crimelord, pirate raiders, dianogas, swamp wampas, Imperial torture droids, undead Sith warriors and the Rancor.

Deathmatch players get 10 new sites for wholesale butchery of their friends, including classic locales like Cloud City, a carbon-freeze chamber and the Imperial Throne Room. Players can look like a Jedi, Imperial soldier, stealthy scout or Boba Fett. Five more multi-player levels link in a contest called "Kill the Fool with the Ysalamiri." To score points with the next Star Wars trivia fan you meet, mention that an ysalamiri is a small salamander-like creature capable of deterring the Force within a ten-meter radius. The price of Mysteries of the Sith was not set at press time, but check www.lucasarts.com for the latest.

SAY, YOU'RE ROLLING WELL TODAY

"I speak the guard's language because of my 18 Intelligence, so I'll charm him with my 18 Charisma. Then, when he's not looking, I'll climb the wall with my 18 Dexterity and break through the window with my 18 Strength." Clearly, this gamer has already discovered Koplow's Character Builders dice. Have you? Guaranteed to roll a six every time, each weighted 18mm die comes in red, green or black (sets of three, $5.98) from Koplow Games, 369 Congress St., Boston, MA 02210; call Customer Service at 1-800-899-0711 for a catalog. But watch out if your gamemaster discovers your Character Builders. He'll make you use 'em in Champions or GURPS where a roll of 18 blows your attack.

HATCHLINGS FOR EVERYONE!

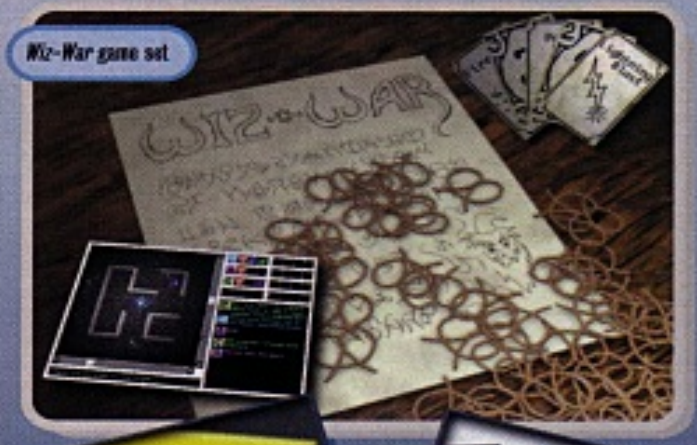

Your party creeps along the shadowed cavern passage toward the dragon's hoard. You peek around the corner, and amid your puny little lead figurines, the gamemaster suddenly drops a bendable rubber Alien Hatchling from last fall's "Alien Resurrection" movie. Eeee-yaaah! These Chestburster and Facehugger toys ($10.25 each) would give small children nightmares, but at 25mm scale they loom as large and menacing as any dragon in your fantasy RPG. And they're a fraction (okay, a large fraction) of the cost of lead figures. Check out the nasty newborns at the Hasbro Web site, www.hasbro.com.

STOP PLAYING WITH YOURSELF

What sight saddens more than a gamer without opponents? Okay, hundreds of sights sadden more. But the point is lonely fans of Jolly Games' Wiz-War and Pinnacle's Fields of Honor miniatures game should soon find plenty of opposition over the Internet. Adventure Online Gaming is preparing online adaptations of these games using innovative tools that work through any standard Java-enabled Web browser, without need for special software. These computer versions are exact translations, so when a Wiz-War player in Wyoming plays his Wall of Thorns onscreen, you'll groan just as if the card hit your own table.

It's free for now, so see how it works at the AOG Web site, www.gameworld.com. Right now, all it offers is a funny card game of backbiting office politics, Lord of the Cubicles, along with Spades and Solitaire. (Whoop-de-doo.) But AOG licensing manager Greg Gorden (designer of Cubicles and the Earthdawn, TORG and DC Heroes RPGs) says Wiz-War should come online by March, with Fields of Honor to follow in late summer. The Web site also announces plans to adapt Daedalus Entertainment's Shadowfist and Feng Shui.

CARDSTOCK

Tracking trends in the card game market

Welcome as always to "Cardstock," where the women are strong and the men are (literally) barbarians. I'm Lars Pearson, InQuest price guide manager and the most Norwegian man in the gaming industry.

A quick note needs to be made about the recently-released First Contact* (Star Trek). It's gotten rave reviews and shown nice, clean increases, but take notice that the excitement is mostly among the major cast members. The good news is cards like Jean-Luc Picard, Data and Geordi LaForge should keep going up since you'd have to be a brainless tribble to play Star Trek and not use them. But in time, the rest of the expansion might stagnate. We'll have to wait and see.

Beyond that, the news this month is Tempest, Tempest, Tempest. It's easily the hottest Magic set right now, with mucho price increases. But beware: Magic's upcoming Stronghold expansion will, of course, immediately trump Tempest as the set to get. That means that the now-zooming Tempest will likely level out and possibly go down. Oof.

Still, here's a short list of extremely useful Tempest cards that might not drop too much under any scenario. Heck, they could even show increases:

- Cursed Scroll—One of the hottest cards right now. Simply put, you name a card and your opponent has to choose one from your hand. If he or she draws the card you name, two damage is meted out to target creature or player. Yowza! Now, if you want to be—and this is a technical term—a "sly bastard," the best idea is to get yourself down to one card when unleashing this baby. That way, the odds of your nemesis choosing the correct one kinda increases. And for the three generic mana it costs to use this spell, the price is rather cheap.
- Eladamri's Vineyard—As a low-casting enchantment, this card really speeds up green decks. If your opponent isn't playing green, they'll be forced to use two green mana every turn to avoid mana burn. Unpleasant, to say the least.
- Earthcraft—Tap a creature to untap a land. That's the beauty of Earthcraft. In combination with a Sacred Mesa or Goblin Warrens, this can become an infinite creature generator. Yee-woo! Free warning, though: If your opponent ever casts Earthcraft, expect him to be playing a Mesacraft deck and counter it or disenchant it as soon as possible.
- Wasteland—With the restriction of Strip Mine, this card has become the choice de resistance for land destruction among Type I and Type II players. Even though you have to sacrifice Wasteland, the devastation to nonbasic lands is absolute.
- Sapphire Medallions—Those pesky Medallions. Players can't decide if they're worth their weight in salt, but one thing is clear: Sapphire Medallions have been enjoying a renaissance. All Medallions make spells cheaper, but with blue cards, this is especially useful. Blue mages need to save mana so they can cast counterspells. Wily players can also use the Sapphires to take advantage of buyback spells like Capsize and Whispers of the Muse.

Beyond Tempest, there is one Magic item of note. The Extended tournament format has really started to gain ground, meaning that it's possible, let me stress possible, that several out-of-print cards will become popular on the singles market. After all, Extended allows for cards from Revised and every expansion after it, including The Dark and Tempest. It's a little too early to do more than speculate which cards will gain in popularity, but stay tuned.

That's all for this month. Stay good, and in the words of Abraham Lincoln, "Whenever (I) hear anyone arguing for slavery, I feel a strong impulse to see Spirit Shackle tried on him personally."

Last month's number one stumbles a few places, tripping over blue guys who inhale incense and who carry around weird garage tools. You'd think mano a mano, Wrath of God could take on the blue mages from Meditation and Time Warp, but those annoying Magic rules get in the way.

InQUEST PLAYERS GUIDE HANDBOOK

What you need to know about the InQuest Players Guide

The InQuest Players Guide is meant to serve as an aid in playing collectible card games. Every month, you'll find the most extensive card descriptions available for Magic: The Gathering, along with power ratings for every single card.

MAGIC The Gathering®

SAMPLE LISTING

Keeper of Kookus SC C •• {R} VS
{R}: Protection from red until end of turn. 1/1.

Keldon Warlord SC U •• {2}{R}{R} I,U,R,4th,5th
* is the number of non-wall creatures in play on your side. /.

•Kird Ape SC C ••••• {R} AN,R
Gains +1/+2 if you have at least one forest in play. 1/1.

Kobold Drill Sergeant SC U • {1}{R} LG
Give all your Kobolds +0/+1 and trample. 1/2.

Kobold Overlord SC R • {1}{R} LG
First strike. Give all your Kobolds first strike. 1/2.

Kobolds of Kher Keep SC C • {0} LG
0/1.

Kobold Taskmaster SC U • {1}{R} LG
Give all your Kobolds +1/+0. 1/2.

Kird Ape is a common creature that has a five power rating and its casting cost is one red mana. It's available in Arabian Nights and Revised. Its power/toughness is 1/1 and it gains +1/+2 if you control any forests (monkeys like trees). Also, it's banned in the Extended tournament format. How do we know all that? Because our lord Paracelsus told us. No, no, just kidding. We know all that cool stuff because we've read all the cool reference charts in the following players guide pages. Paracelsus had next to nothing to do with it. Just so you know: restricted cards are limited to one per deck in tournaments. And banned cards, well, are a no-no for tournaments.

POWER RATINGS

Trying to figure out which cards to put into your tournament deck? After playing Magic for hours on end, we've rated every single card. So if you're trying to figure out whether or not a card is going to make your deck competitive, check out our power ratings.

••••• Five Stars. The best of the best. In order for a card to earn a five-star rating it has to be incredibly useful in just about any deck of the appropriate color. These are the cards you see time and again in tournaments.

•••• Four Stars. Don't get us wrong...some cards can be great without being the best. There are a lot of useful cards that you don't want to use all the time. Necropotence is a great card, but it only works in a couple of types of decks.

••• Three Stars. Smack dab in the the middle, these are the good solid cards that can be very useful in casual play, but are often too expensive or too limiting to be put to really good use in most tournament decks.

•• Two Stars. These cards have their uses, but they're generally only put into decks when the set they're in first comes out, when they're part of a deck with a funky theme or when they're used for fun in casual play.

• One Star. The cream of the crap, these are the cards that few people use if they have any goal of winning. Use these cards and you're begging to be nicknamed Eugene T. Dudley.

— Inapplicable. These cards are basic resources. You can't win a game playing only these cards, but you can't win without 'em, either.

KILLED COMBOS

Basalt Monolith and Relic Bind: The combo is painfully easy: Slap the Relic Bind on your Basalt Monolith, tap it for three mana, use the mana to untap the Monolith, repeat as necessary. The folks at WotC went into conniptions trying to figure out how to fix this, ultimately slashing the usefulness of Relic Bind by limiting it to artifacts your opponent controls.

KILLED COMBOS

Volcanic Eruption and Magical Hack: Believe it or not, this combo was once the foundation of a popular deck archetype—the blue land destruction deck. You used to be able to target several forests or plains with a Volcanic Eruption and then Hack it so the lands would be destroyed. Once the targeting rules were cleared up, we were reduced to Instill Energied Demonic Hordes.

ONE-STAR WONDERS

Poor Natural Selection. This card has great artwork, but WotC keeps coming out with better cards that do something similar. Visions, Brainstorm, Portent, Sylvan Library, Mirri's Guile....It seems like Natural Selection has become less useful with each expansion. So the more Magic cards that have been created, the more Natural Selection has diminished in value. What would Darwin have to say about that?

ONE-STAR WONDERS

Like Natural Selection, Artifact Blast is a victim of better cards. In the case of the Blast, that better card already existed. While there are times when countering an artifact can be useful, it's generally more worthwhile to use a Shatter. The flexibility of being able to destroy an artifact already on the table makes Shatter and its equivalents infinitely more useful—and renders Artifact Blast proportionately useless.

KILLED COMBOS

Lich and Remove Enchantments: Today, the only way to not die from losing control of a Lich is if your opponent is foolish enough to snag it with a Steal Enchantment. Originally, you only died if the Lich was destroyed. If you could send it back to your hand some other way—like with Remove Enchantments—and gain some life, you could undo your unlife.

ONE-STAR WONDERS

As much as you may like drawing cards, four mana for a 1/1 flying creature with no other special abilities is not good. Generally, the only good contrip cards are the ones that are actually useful. A 1/1 flier will almost never do you good if cast any later than the second turn, making the Pigeons not fit for bird doo-doo.

ONE-STAR WONDERS

Surprisingly, some people disagreed with us when we declared Pegasus Refuge the worst card in Tempest. Sure, there's a wealth of other crappy cards to choose from, like Ancient Tomb and Tooth and Claw, but requiring you to discard a card to get a 1/1 flier is insulting. Late in the game this ability might be useful, but late in the game wouldn't you rather have a Kjeldoran Outpost or Sacred Mesa in your hand?

THE DAY I "FIXED" MAGIC

"Hey, you're not allowed to do that!" cried the pimply kid across from me.

"Oh, sorry," I said through a mouthful of chocolate-covered peanuts. "Did you want one?" I asked, offering the bag.

"No, I was talking about that play you tried to make. It's illegal."

Whew. I pulled my peanuts back to my side of the table and looked over the Magic cards I had in play.

"It says right here on the card that's how it's supposed to work," I said.

"Well, they ruled that you're not allowed to use a card twice on the same player."

"But I'm only using it once," I protested.

"Sorry."

I noticed that the player on my left was down to two life, so I tugged on the judge's sleeve and pointed at my neighbor.

"What if I target him?"

Befuddled, the judge started madly flipping through his rulebooks. After several minutes, he shrugged his shoulders.

"I can't find any rule that says you can't target a player in a different game, so I guess it's legal."

After this incident I knew it was time to drag out the ol' time machine and do my patriotic duty—go back in time and tell Richard Garfield about the problems, then he could fix them before they happened.

I remembered reading somewhere that Garfield had key inspirations at a 7-11 in Seattle on... Where was that article? Oh yeah, March 14th, 1993. I climbed into the time machine, set the dials and the next thing I knew I was standing in the rain outside a 7-11. It worked!

I walked into the store and sure enough, standing by the Slurpee machine scribbling on a napkin...

"Hey, you're Richard Garfield!" I cried out. "You invented Magic!"

"Huh?" He looked up from his banana-cherry Slurpee.

"I'm here to warn you about all kinds of problems you're going to have with your game."

"Like what?" he said, wiping syrup from his chin.

"Like those Moxes... They're way too powerful. And fans will get really upset when they can't track down the ultra-rare Mox Booger."

"No Booger..." he scribbled on his napkin.

"And Time Walk, Black Lotus—heck—even the Shivan Dragon. They're all too good."

"No Time Walk. No... say, how do you know so much about my game?"

"I was at your lecture on, um, monkey ranching."

"Ah, monkey ranches," he said with a smile. "Just give me a few good monkeys and..."

"Um, it's not just the cards though. The real problem is the rules; they're too confusing. All this timing and targeting and banding and summoning. It's just too much."

"I see," he said with a concerned look on his face.

"Is something wrong?" I asked.

"I was just pondering the practical applications of modifying the combat system to correlate with Hooke's law."

"I think you better leave the math degree out of it, professor. But maybe you could include a summon Cow Nose card," I said, whipping out my wallet to show him a string of pictures.

"She would get a +1/+1 bonus against..."

"Don't push it. You know I don't remember giving any lecture on..."

"Whooaa... look at the time," I said pointing at my watch. "I've gotta go, but remember, simple is better."

And with that, I dashed out of the 7-11 and returned to 1998. When I got back, I decided to stop by the local store and try my hand at a few games. With all the power cards gone and the rules trimmed down, I'd finally be able to kick a little behind myself.

But when I got to the store, nobody was playing Magic. Everyone was playing...

"Spellfire?" I cried, nearly dropping my peanuts. "What are you doing?!"

"We're 'mastering the magic' dude," came the response from a pudgy kid with stacks of cards.

"But what happened to the game Magic?" I said.

The store owner looked up, "We had that game in here a few years ago, but nobody wanted to play. It was too simple and none of the cards were all that interesting. I mean, who wants to play a game where one of the power cards is an overweight cat?

"Anyway, I hear the guy who invented the game is off managing monkey ranches."

Rick Swan logged a buttload of frequent time traveler miles to fix this mess. If everything went according to plan, Richard Garfield shouldn't remember any of this.

Into The EXILE ZONE

An Original RPG Module!

Compatible with AD&D™, GURPS™ and more!

You've just been wrongly imprisoned, transformed into a mindless beast and within hours you'll be captured, tortured and skinned alive. Welcome to the Exile Zone.

This booklet is the companion to "Into the Exile Zone," the adventure which appears inside InQuest #36. The following information, which includes the background story, a map of the Zone and game statistics for Advanced Dungeons & Dragons, Earthdawn and GURPS, is for the gamemaster only.

HISTORY OF THE ZONE

By the InQuest staff. All illustrations by Allen G. Douglas.

The Exile Zone was created over 50 years ago when a transmuter's experiments with shapechanging magic went awry. The accident destroyed the wizard and polluted the Zone (an approximately 15x10-mile area) with chaotic magic. Since the accident, any creature or person entering the Zone is transformed into a mindless beast.

About two years ago, a budding sorceress named Inshara (apprentice to Xanalor, the local city wizard) was sent into the Zone. Protected by a magical sigil, her mission was to learn more about the nature of the place. While exploring the Zone, she discovered the remains of the transmuter's tower. With the knowledge she found there, she was able to harness the energy of the Zone to cast a sigil, similar to the one Xanalor had cast, upon herself. Only this sigil, because it was created by the magic of the Zone, was permanent.

As the sorceress learned to manipulate the magic of the Zone, she began experimenting by casting the sigil on others. With her magic she was able to restore their intelligence and, because she could just as easily remove the sigil, these creatures were bound in service to her. The sorceress assumed a new identity, as the creature K'mar, and gradually took control of the Zone.

The one thing over which K'mar did not have control was the manner of creature into which people were transformed when they entered the Zone. To secure more powerful followers, she needed more powerful creatures; the only way to ensure the creation of powerful creatures was by maintaining a steady flow of humans into the Zone.

Eventually, K'mar forged a deal with Xanalor and the neighboring city of Lorinthar. As long as they kept a stream of people coming into the Zone, she would export valuable hides and other body parts from the creatures she didn't choose as followers. More and more criminals and locals were sent into the Zone. Justice became increasingly harsh in Lorinthar, and drifters and vagabonds were forced into the Zone by roving patrols because no one would miss them. With each wave of new entries, K'mar grew more powerful.

However, there were circumstances K'mar did not foresee. Not all of the creatures she converted were criminals; some were innocents who had been wrongly imprisoned in the Zone. Several of these creatures, horrified by K'mar's corrupt practices, banded together and fled from her stronghold.

Unable to escape the Zone, these renegades established a village near the Zone's eastern border and have been desperately searching for a way to stop K'mar. Their efforts have been fruitless so far; since they bear the sigil created by K'mar, they cannot approach her stronghold without her knowledge, and even if they could, she has the power to remove their sigils and return them to the doom of their bestial mentalities.

Other than the difficulties with the renegades, K'mar has a smooth operation going; her minions usually wait by the entrance of the Zone, nabbing new creatures as they enter. Some are added to her ranks, others are sent to the processing area to be skinned and stripped of all useable parts, and some prisoners of particular personal interest are chained to pillars in her main chamber and tortured.

Only a select few people in Lorinthar know of K'mar and the goings-on inside the Zone. The mayor, Xanalor and top traders and city guards who move the goods from the Zone know the truth, but they aren't talking; the whole town is happy so long as trade is booming. And business is good when you receive exotic skins and furs for free and sell them for a handsome price.

CREATURE BAZAAR

A sample of the wildlife roaming the Zone

BALTHOR: The balthor is a large creature that looks like a small whale, but walks on short, stubby legs. Its thick hide is virtually impervious to piercing and slashing forms of damage, but it is very slow and not particularly bright.

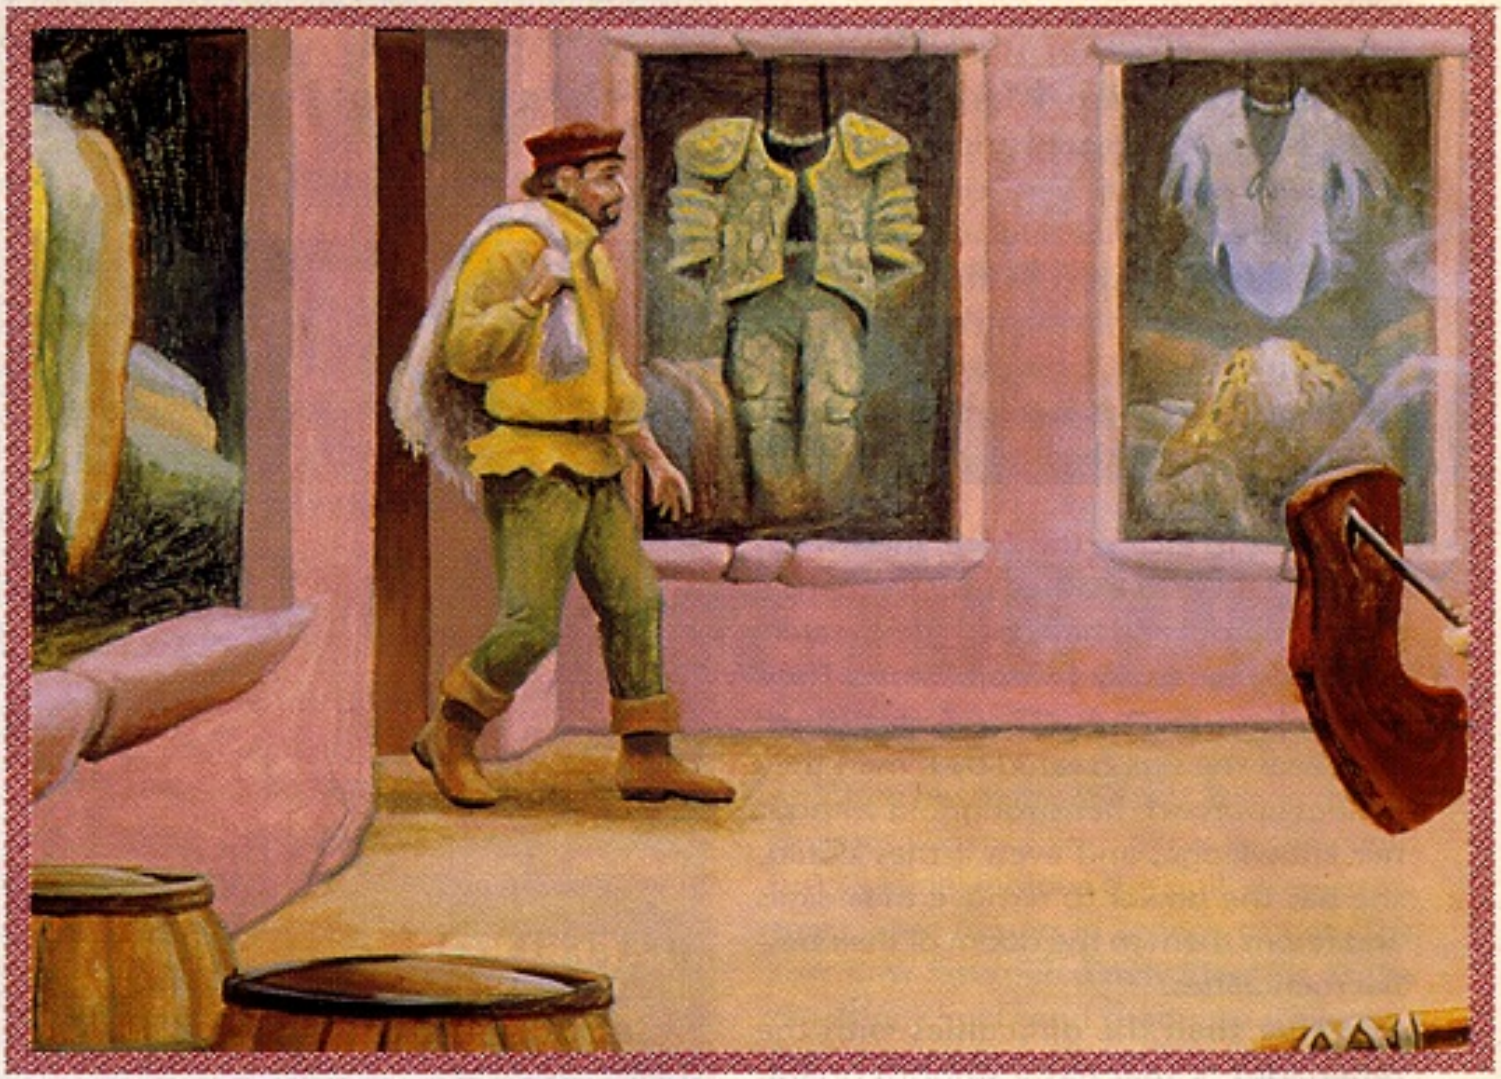

CUCKRAW: This humanoid creature has many bird-like features, including feathers, tiny three-toed feet and a long stork-like beak as long as half the height of its body. The cuckraw attacks from above by impaling its victim with its beak.

JAFFELKOP: This three-foot tall, rabbit-like herbivore has four multifaceted eyes on stalks. It is harmless to anything but plants, but its thick, soft fur makes it a tempting target for hunters.

PRISMATOSAUR: This reptilian quadruped is made of transparent crystal and is invisible under certain forms of light. It acts as a prism, reflecting light into the eyes of its prey, and is able to start fires from a distance.

QUAPHLING: This giant rodent with no hind legs burrows through the earth, weakening the ground above and causing its prey to fall underground to be eaten. It attacks with a paralytic venom and navigates by sound and vibration.

ZENEBORD: This five-foot tall, insectoid creature seems harmless—until it spreads its 30-foot wingspan. When the zenebord beats its wings, it creates a deafening buzzing and sweeping gusts of wind.

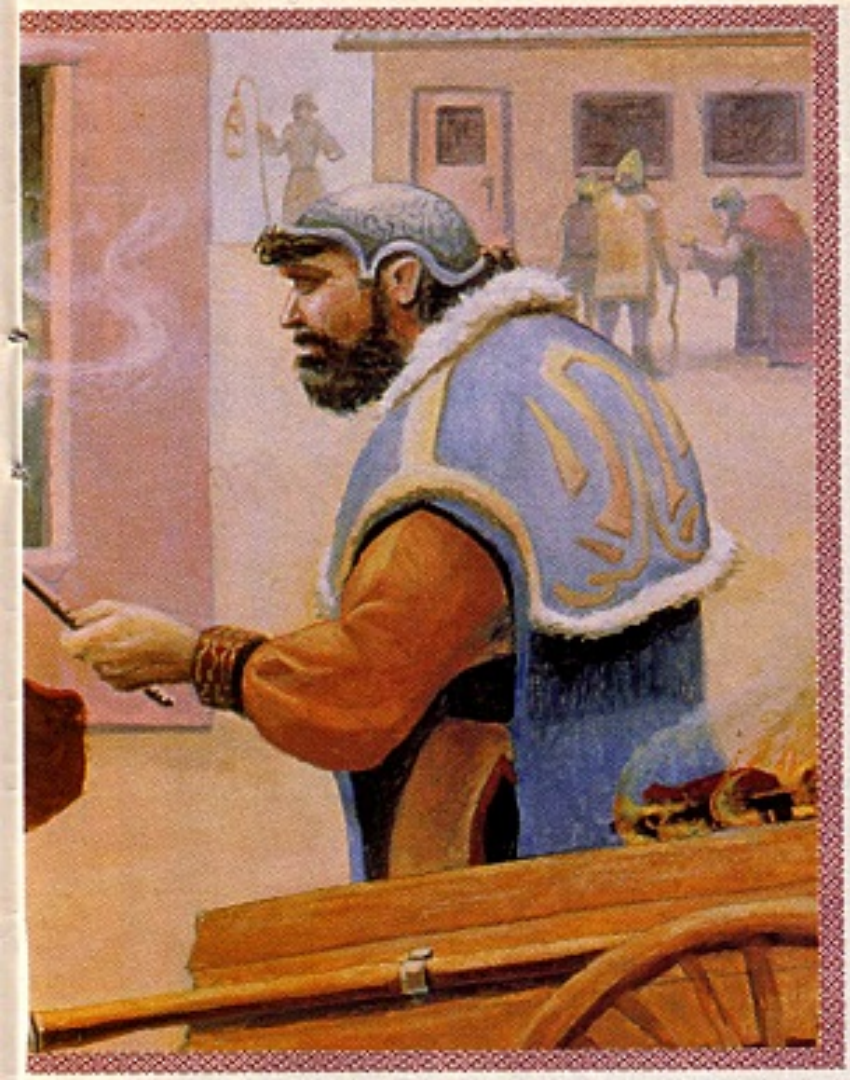

THE CITY OF LORINTHAR

The city of Lorinthar blossomed only a few years ago, springing up from a small farming village to a hub of trade and commerce. Thanks to the trade that has been set up between Xanalor and K'mar, Lorinthar has become one of the wealthiest cities in the area. There is no poverty; there are no beggars in the streets. Everyone who lives and works around the Exile Zone is well-off.

The shops in Lorinthar are not laid out like a typical bazaar. Instead, there is a storefront (like an outlet mall). Goods are on display in the open windows of the stores—it would be very easy to steal something, but no one in the city would dare. The shops include just about every type imaginable. There's Ardin's Armory, Firgle's Fine Weaponry, Bolthikar's Magic Shoppe (with almost every conceivable spell component), numerous taverns and inns—and even Madame Sorsha's Massage Parlor.

If the player characters (PCs) are looking for something exotic, they can find it in Lorinthar. All the shops have one thing in common, though: The prices are expensive; goods cost anywhere from two to 10 times their normal value. Then again, everything is of the highest quality. All the items in Lorinthar are unique, crafted from alien-sounding creatures.

Most of the people in Lorinthar don't know the true nature of the goods they buy and sell. They just know that these goods are imported from all over the land. Trade caravans are always entering and leaving the city. The people the PCs will be able to talk to get their raw materials from the traders; they don't know what goes on outside of that.

One thing all people in Lorinthar know is that crime is not permitted. Uniformed guards patrol the streets, ready to arrest anyone causing a disturbance. To keep people entering the Zone, guard captains have the authority to execute punishment, banishing prisoners into the realm of monsters. Lorinthar's officials are not interested in justice or fairness; they're interested in making sure people get sent to the Zone.

One important note: Lorinthar is so overwhelmed with the magic of the Zone that magic-detection spells and abilities have no effect. This phenomenon is unexplainable, and if the PCs ask around they'll just get a lot of shrugs.

TOURIST SPOTS

- DRENDEL'S FRESH MEATS: Drendel is one of many street dealers who doesn't own a shop but instead peddles his wares in a cart. Drendel has a variety of delicious meats that he sells hot, including such exotic beasts as the spicy juntlepon and the chewy balthor.
- THE GEM BAZAAR: This quaint shop is filled with a large assortment of gems, crystals, decorative jewelry and other fineries. The owner, Jarvis, is an expert in appraising and is always looking to trade for rare gems (for which he knows he can get a higher value outside of Lorinthar).
- THE LUCKY RABBIT: Looking to add to your pile of loot? The Lucky Rabbit is a gaming hall open at all hours for suckers, er, gamblers to try some games of chance. Unlike most gambling halls, you actually have a chance to win in the Rabbit (but the odds are still always in the house's favor).
- THE TRADERS' GUILD: The largest guild in the city belongs to the traders, which sponsors a variety of events within the city, including the annual Creature Bazaar, a parade of stuffed exotic beasts.
- THE TRIPPING CRANE: If you're just looking for a good stiff drink, this is the place to go. It's also a prime spot for information. The bartender Milo keeps tabs on what is happening in the city and is always up on the latest gossip.

The Nature of the Exile Zone

The Exile Zone is a place of powerful, chaotic magic. Any person entering the Zone is transformed—along with all items he is carrying—into a bizarre creature. The victim loses all semblance of his former personality, becoming the creature into which he has changed.

While entering the Zone is easy, leaving is much more difficult. The magical field surrounding the Zone prevents any creature from exiting the barrier without tremendous bodily harm; almost all creatures who attempt to leave the Zone will either be forced to turn back or die trying to escape. Even if a creature does manage to leave, the magic does not wear off; he remains a mindless beast.

Key Locations Within the Zone

1. Zone Entrance. Prisoners brought to the Zone enter through this portal. K'Mar's minions often wait near this entrance when they know prisoners are being brought in so they can strike immediately.

2. Pit Trap. Those that aren't immediately hunted down when they enter the Zone often get caught in one of K'mar's traps. The pit traps, usually about 15 feet deep, are designed to capture, not kill.

3. Renegade Village. When the renegades fled from K'mar's fortress, they built a village so they could live as a civilized community instead of as beasts. The village is crudely constructed, made mostly of thatched huts and tree forts, but it allows the renegades to maintain a semblance of their humanity.

4. Wizard Tower Ruins. The tower that belonged to the transmuter who created the Zone used to be at this location; it has since been removed by K'mar, who has taken apart the tower to use in the construction of her own fortress. All that remains now is the foundation and the basement.

5. Coal Mine. This old quarry by the river is an old coal mine which has remained mostly untouched since the Zone was created over 50 years ago. The coal used to be gold; it was transformed when the Zone was created. When the Zone reverts back to normal, it will once again be a gold mine.

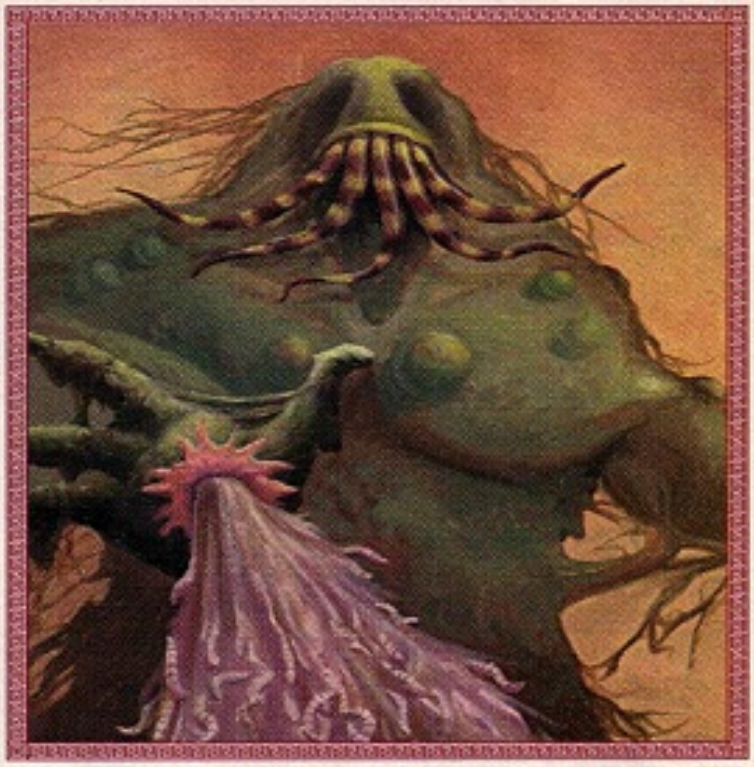

6. K'mar's Fortress. This large stone structure is set into the side of the mountain. Half is carved out of the mountain; the rest is in the process of being constructed with the bricks from the former wizard's tower.

7. Zone Breach. This small, nondescript area, about 50 feet wide, was discovered by K'mar some time ago. It is a small magical breach, through which one can leave the Zone without harm. It is through this area that K'mar ships goods out of the Zone. The breach is detectable only as a faint ripple in the normal border of the Zone; unless someone is looking for the breach, they are unlikely to find it.

PLAYER STATISTICS

GRUBSKIN

This humanoid creature has no visible eyes or nose, and several squid-like tentacles protruding from its mouth. Its skin is somewhere between slimy and rotting, and it has bulging pustules all over its body. The grubskin exists in a symbiotic relationship with thousands of tiny maggot-like grubs which live inside its body.

The grubskin has a frail body, but it possesses a powerful ranged ability. It can shoot the grubs from its pustules. These tiny creatures instinctively eat through just about anything with which they come in contact—including flesh and stone. However, the grubs' lives are short-lived; they usually die within 15-20 seconds of leaving their host's body.

Weird Sensations: The grubskin can feel little things wriggling inside its body and there are pustules on its body that seem as if they're ready to burst. However, the pustules do not break without active thought.

SPECIAL DEFENSE: Ruptured skin. Any successful close-combat strike against the grubskin causes a skin breach and the aggressor takes a half-damage attack from the grubskin's maggots.

STALKER

This bipedal cat-like creature is a vicious predator that stalks its prey with remarkably acute senses, including perfect night-vision. The stalker can see, smell and hear better than most wild animals. When hunting, it is able to lock its vision onto its prey, instinctively maintaining sight of its victim as it moves in for the kill. The stalker rarely tracks its prey; when it is hungry, it listens or looks for its quarry.

The stalker attacks with two sets of knife-like fingers. It doesn't have retractable claws; its fingers are claws. If both of its claw-attacks connect, the stalker can latch onto its victim, using the victim as an anchor to whip its powerful tail around for a third attack.

Weird Sensations: The stalker is very aware of its surroundings, and until it becomes comfortable with its heightened abilities, this causes a sense of paranoia. The stalker has little control over its tail—it tends to flutter about—unless its body is anchored.

SPECIAL ABILITIES: Acute senses, night vision, 90 percent invisibility at night.

FLOWMORPH

A flowmorph is a transparent, amorphous ooze-like creature that can alter its shape. Fledgling flowmorphs have limited shapechanging ability; they can only assume concrete forms with which they are familiar, and it takes years to learn a form. For example, a human shapechanged into a flowmorph would be able to assume a humanoid form, but it would not be able to hold any other form. However, all flowmorphs have the instinctive ability to squeeze their puddle-like bodies through small cracks.

The flowmorph is not a combat-monger, but it can be deadly in battle. While in puddle-form, it attacks by attempting to envelop its target, covering its victim's breathing orifices. The flowmorph can also attack using the normal attack mode of the form it currently maintains, although this is much less effective. Because of its resilient nature, it is harder to damage a flowmorph—they take only half damage from all types of attacks, except fire.

Weird Sensations: The flowmorph normally exists as a puddle. When it gives concentration to a form or body part with which it is familiar, it just kind of assumes that form. When possible, the flowmorph feels a desire to be in a cold, hard location.

SPECIAL DEFENSES: 1) Half damage from all attacks, except fire. 2) Fluid body. Flowmorphs can shapechange into various humanoid forms and squeeze through small spaces and cracks.

BALEWORM

This predatory creature uses its thick, acid-secreting body to secure its prey, then chews off pieces of the victim with its powerful jaws. The baleworm can also burrow into the ground, creating a tunnel anywhere from three feet to eight feet in diameter, depending on how much acid it chooses to secrete. The digging is loud, as it causes the ground to rumble, and the worm can only burrow for a maximum of 20 yards before it must come up for air.

The worm attacks by lunging at its target and wrapping its body around the victim. Alternatively, it can attack by gnashing its teeth, an ability the worm must often use when forced to fight creatures too large for it to ensnare. If the worm manages to wrap around its target, it can squeeze the victim, secreting an acidic substance in the process. The acid softens the creature, making it easier to chew.

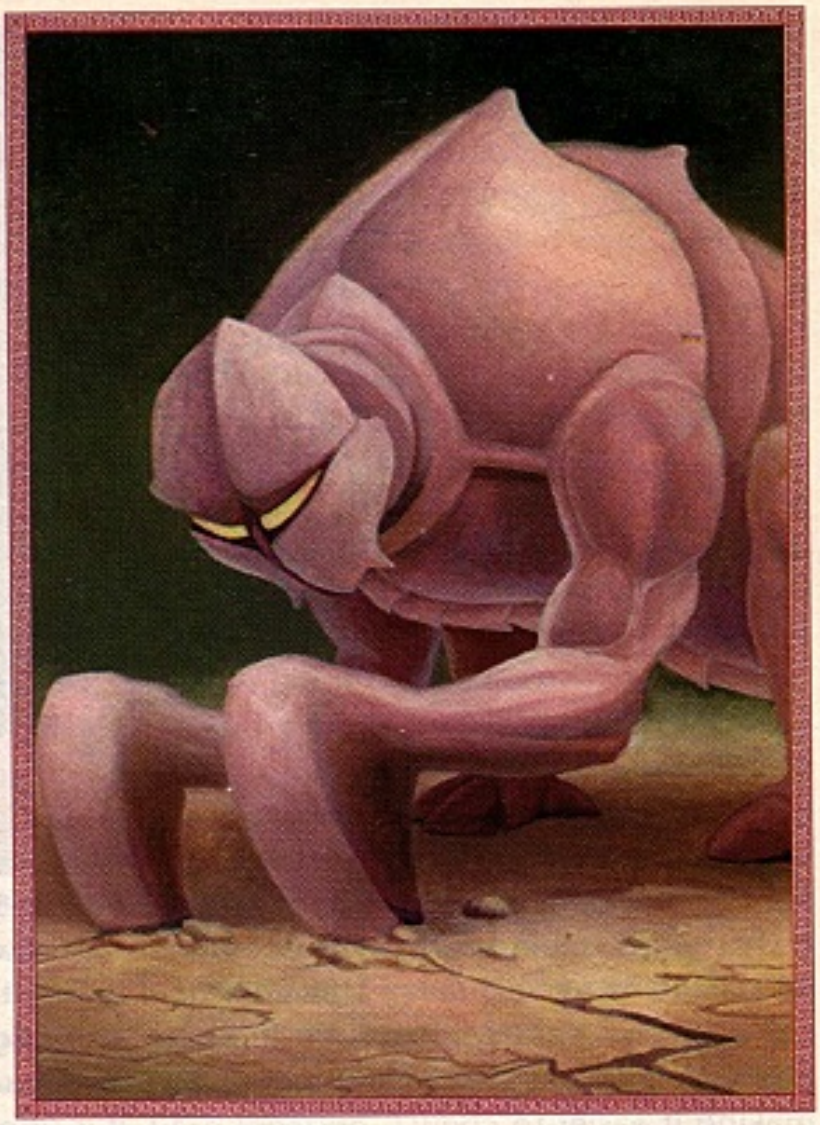

Weird Sensations: The baleworm often feels a desire to be underground, but when it burrows the soil feels unpleasantly tight against its body. The worm also has great difficulty swallowing while it is uncoiled.

SPECIAL DEFENSE: Burrowing.

GEOPHAGE

This fierce creature has large stone-like plates of armor and a powerful pair of arms that can break through trees, stone and bone. The geophage subsists on a diet of minerals, pounding through earth and stone to find nutrients. It moves, albeit slowly, by leaning on its front arms and swinging its back legs through between them.

Short-tempered, the geophage can be deadly when provoked to battle. The creature digs and fights by rearing back on his hind legs and bringing his arms crashing down. The powerful blow can fell a tree with one strike and, with persistence, eventually pound through stone. The geophage is not invulnerable, though. Even piercing and slashing attacks can put chips in its armor.

Weird Sensations: The geophage has a hunger for stone, although it does not have teeth capable of biting off a piece of rock. It is not comfortable when its arms are raised, as it requires great effort to keep them off the ground.

SPECIAL ATTACK: Earthquake punch. All creatures on the ground within 30 feet have a 50 percent chance of being knocked down (-4 penalty to next die roll).

WINGED SLURRY

The winged slurry is a hemovore, its diet consisting mainly of the blood of other animals. It has a cement-like spit which it uses to immobilize its prey. The quick-drying cement can lock the victim's feet to the ground. Once the creature is stationary, the slurry draws its victim's blood by plunging its spiked tail into the creature's body.

The slurry is not a graceful flier, but it has enough wingpower to hover above its target so that it can pinpoint its spit-attack and then dive in to feed. Alternatively, the slurry can attack with its claws, but this leaves it extremely susceptible to retaliation.

Weird Sensations: The slurry usually has quite a bit of phlegm in its throat, which takes a little getting used to. The thought of blood makes the slurry salivate—not through its mouth, but through its tail.

MONSTER STATISTICS

K'MAR

K'mar no longer has a natural form within the Zone, although she usually appears as a humanoid demonic figure with bright crimson, translucent skin and a coarse, sand-paper hide. This form also has retractable wings which allow her to fly. When K'mar first appears before the PCs, she will appear smaller and more frail, but her first shapechange will be into this demonic form. Her fiery fists deliver a powerful blow, but as soon as she is threatened, she will switch to another form.

K'mar will readily assume any of the PCs forms, as well as those listed elsewhere in the booklet. For example, if K'mar is about to take a nasty hit, she'll change into a stegosaurus-like creature with armored plates. If the baleworm or ooze tries to ensnare or envelop her, she'll change into a slimy serpent, sliding her way out to safety. It is possible for K'mar to take some damage, but she'll be able to avoid most hits. As the battle nears its end, she will transform into a red dragon transform into an arachnigon—a fire-breathing, dragon-spider.

K'MAR'S MINIONS

PORCUPINE WOLVES

These wolf-like creatures have varying unique features: porcupine-like quills that they can fire at range, spikes running down their spine, long curved fangs. But essentially, they fight like a pack of wolves, circling their prey and then moving in for the attack. Once a few members of the pack have been taken down, the rest will flee.

FORTRESS GUARDS

There are 20 humanoids guarding the main entrance. Various distinctive traits of this motley crew include lizard-like scales, smooth metallic skin, bear-like hide, etc. The guards' job is to protect the entrance, attacking any wandering monsters and sigil-bearing creatures that they do not recognize. The creatures have different attack modes, but they all basically involve two attacks with natural weapons—sword-like arms, claws, stone fist, etc.

BREEDING CHAMBER GUARD

The lone guard in the breeding chamber is a burly humanoid creature with thin dreadlock-like tentacles dripping from its face and several whip-like appendages, which it uses to keep other creatures in line. Each successful strike has a 10 percent cumulative chance of paralyzing the victim for 4d6 rounds.

SKINNERS

The creatures K'mar has chosen to skin and pick apart the victims of the Zone were chosen because of their natural abilities. These tall, thin beings have long, razor-sharp fingers that can slice open other creatures as well as carefully pick out individual organs. However, the creatures are not trained for combat and will, therefore, avoid it if possible.

K'MAR'S GUARDIAN

This beast is a large spidery-crab creature with 10 spiky legs and thick armored plates covering its back. It attacks by twisting its spiked legs into the air and bringing them down on its target. It has circular vision, allowing it to see and attack on all sides, but it can be confused if flanked and loses an attack for each leg which is disabled.
